

Nos. 16-1099, 16-1136

In the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit

HAYNES BUILDING SERVICES, LLC,
Petitioner / Cross-Respondent,

– v. –

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD,
Respondent / Cross-Petitioner.

On petition for review of a final decision and order of the National Labor Relations Board
Case 31-CA-093920

BRIEF OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AS AMICUS CURIAE
SUPPORTING PETITIONER

KATE COMERFORD TODD
WARREN POSTMAN
*U.S. Chamber Litigation Center
1615 H Street NW
Washington, DC 20062
(202) 463-5337*

ANDREW J. PINCUS
EVAN M. TAGER
ARCHIS A. PARASHARAMI
MATTHEW A. WARING
*Mayer Brown LLP
1999 K Street NW
Washington, DC 20006
(202) 263-3000*

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

CERTIFICATE OF PARTIES, RULINGS, AND RELATED CASES
PURSUANT TO CIRCUIT RULE 28(A)(1)

A. Parties and Amici. Except for the following, all parties, intervenors, and amici appearing in this Court are listed in the Brief for Petitioner: The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America appears as amicus curiae in this Court.

B. Ruling Under Review. References to the rulings at issue appear in the Brief for Petitioner.

C. Related Cases. To the best of amicus's knowledge, the Certificate of Related Cases in the Brief for Petitioner is accurate.

CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America (the “Chamber”) is a nonprofit, tax-exempt organization incorporated in the District of Columbia. The Chamber has no parent corporation, and no publicly held company has 10% or greater ownership in the Chamber.

STATEMENT REGARDING CONSENT TO FILE AND SEPARATE BRIEFING

All parties have consented to the filing of this brief. The Chamber filed its notice of intent to participate in this case as amicus curiae on July 28, 2016.*

Pursuant to Circuit Rule 29(d), the Chamber certifies that a separate brief is necessary to provide the perspective of the businesses that the Chamber represents regarding the importance of enforcing agreements that require bilateral arbitration to employers, employees, and the national economy. The Chamber has submitted amicus briefs on the same issue presented here in a case pending in this Circuit, Price-Simms, Inc. v. NLRB (Nos. 15-1457, 16-1010), as well as cases in the Second, Third, Fourth, Sixth, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits.

* In accordance with Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 29(c)(5), amicus affirms that no counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part and that no person other than amicus, its members, or its counsel made a monetary contribution intended to fund the brief's preparation or submission. All parties have consented to the filing of this brief.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Certificate of Parties, Rulings, and Related Cases Pursuant to Circuit Rule 28(a)(1).....	i
Corporate Disclosure Statement.....	ii
Statement Regarding Consent to File and Separate Briefing.....	iii
Table of Authorities.....	vi
Glossary	x
Relevant Statutes and Regulations	1
Interest of the Amicus Curiae	1
Introduction and Summary of Argument.....	2
Argument.....	3
I. The D.R. Horton Rule Is Precluded By The FAA.....	3
A. The FAA Requires That Agreements To Arbitrate Disputes On An Individual Basis Be Enforced According To Their Terms.....	5
B. Neither Of The Exceptions To The FAA’s Mandate Applies Here.....	7
1. The Supreme Court has already held that the savings clause does not apply to rules that condition the enforcement of arbitration provisions on the availability of classwide procedures.....	8
2. The NLRA does not evince a “contrary congressional command” sufficient to override the FAA.....	13
II. Rejecting the D.R. Horton Rule Will Benefit Employees, Businesses, And The National Economy.....	25
Conclusion.....	30

Certificate of Compliance 32
Certificate of Service 33

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES†

	Page(s)
CASES
14 Penn Plaza LLC v. Pyett , 556 U.S. 247 (2009).....	26
Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson , 513 U.S. 265 (1995).....	26
* Am. Express Co. v. Italian Colors Rest. , 133 S. Ct. 2304 (2013).....	1, 5, 6, 11, 12, 16, 17, 18, 20
Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor , 521 U.S. 591 (1997).....	18, 19
* AT&T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion , 563 U.S. 333 (2011)...	1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 20, 24, 25, 26
Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams , 532 U.S. 105 (2001).....	27
* CompuCredit Corp. v. Greenwood , 132 S. Ct. 665 (2012).....	13, 14, 15, 16, 20, 21, 22, 24
In re D.R. Horton, Inc. , 357 NLRB No. 184, 2012 WL 36274 (2012).....	2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 19, 23, 24, 25, 26
Deposit Guar. Nat’l Bank, Jackson, Miss. v. Roper , 445 U.S. 326 (1980).....	19
DIRECTV, Inc. v. Imburgia , 136 S. Ct. 463 (2015).....	1, 7
Discover Bank v Superior Court of L.A. , 113 P.3d 1100 (Cal. 2005).....	6, 9, 10, 12, 13

† Authorities upon which we chiefly rely are marked with asterisks.

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES
(continued)

	Page(s)
Eastex, Inc. v. NLRB , 437 U.S. 556 (1978).....	17
Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp. , 500 U.S. 20 (1991).....	6, 15, 20, 21, 24
Green Tree Fin. Corp.-Ala. v. Randolph , 531 U.S. 79 (2000).....	15
Iskanian v. CLS Transp. L.A., LLC , 327 P.3d 129 (Cal. 2014).....	4, 13, 16, 17, 18
KPMG LLP v. Cocchi , 132 S. Ct. 23 (2011) (per curiam)	5
Lewis v. Epic Sys. Corp. , 2016 WL 3029464 (7th Cir. May 26, 2016).....	4, 18
Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc. , 473 U.S. 614 (1985).....	5, 15, 16, 22
Murphy Oil USA, Inc. , 361 NLRB No. 72, 2014 WL 5465454 (2014).....	7, 8, 9, 11, 15, 17, 18, 21, 22, 23
On Assignment Staffing Servs., Inc. , 362 NLRB No. 189, 2015 WL 5113231 (2015).....	4, 5
Owen v. Bristol Care, Inc. , 702 F.3d 1050 (8th Cir. 2013).....	4
Pollard v. ETS PC, Inc. , ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, 2016 WL 2983530 (D. Colo. 2016)	4, 22
Richards v. Ernst & Young, LLP , 744 F.3d 1072 (9th Cir. 2013).....	4
Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc. , 490 U.S. 477 (1989).....	15

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES
(continued)

	Page(s)
Shearson/Am. Express Inc. v. McMahon , 482 U.S. 220 (1987).....	8, 14, 15
Stolt-Nielsen S.A. v. AnimalFeeds Int’l Corp. , 559 U.S. 662 (2010).....	25, 26
Sutherland v. Ernst & Young LLP , 726 F.3d 290 (2d Cir. 2013).....	4
 Statutes and Rules
7 U.S.C. § 26(n)(2)	14
9 U.S.C. §§ 1-16	1
*§ 2	2, 6, 8
15 U.S.C. § 1226(a)(2).....	14
28 U.S.C. § 2072(b)	19
29 U.S.C. § 626(b).....	20
§ 157	9, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23	18, 19, 20
 Other Authorities
Theodore J. St. Antoine, Mandatory Arbitration: Why It’s Better Than It Looks , 41 U. MICH. J.L. REFORM 783 (2008).....	28
JOHN W. COOLEY & STEVEN LUBET, ARBITRATION ADVOCACY ¶ 1.3.1 (2d ed. 2003)	28
Michael Delikat & Morris M. Kleiner, An Empirical Study of Dispute Resolution Mechanisms: Where Do Plaintiffs Better Vindicate Their Rights? , 58 DISP. RESOL. J. 56 (Nov. 2003-Jan. 2004)	28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES
(continued)

	Page(s)
Elizabeth Hill, AAA Employment Arbitration: A Fair Forum at Low Cost , 58 DISP. RESOL. J. 9 (2003)	27
Lewis L. Maltby, Private Justice: Employment Arbitration and Civil Rights , 30 COLUM. HUM. RTS. L. REV. 29 (1998)	28, 29
Stephen J. Ware, The Case for Enforcing Adhesive Arbitration Agreements—With Particular Consideration of Class Actions and Arbitration Fees , 5 J. AM. ARB. 251 (2006)	29

GLOSSARY

ADEA	Age Discrimination in Employment Act
CROA	Credit Repair Organizations Act
FAA	Federal Arbitration Act
NLRA	National Labor Relations Act
NLRB	National Labor Relations Board

RELEVANT STATUTES AND REGULATIONS

All applicable statutes, etc., are contained in the Brief for Petitioner.

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America is the world's largest business federation, representing 300,000 direct members and indirectly representing an underlying membership of more than three million U.S. businesses and professional organizations of every size and in every economic sector and geographic region of the country. The Chamber regularly files amicus briefs in cases that raise issues of vital concern to the nation's business community, including cases involving the enforceability of arbitration agreements. See, e.g., DIRECTV, Inc. v. Imburgia, 136 S. Ct. 463 (2015); Am. Express Co. v. Italian Colors Rest., 133 S. Ct. 2304 (2013); AT&T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion, 563 U.S. 333 (2011). Because the simplicity, informality, and expedition of arbitration depend on the courts' consistent recognition and application of the principles underlying the Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA"), 9 U.S.C. §§ 1-16, the Chamber and its members have a strong interest in this case.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

In the four years since the National Labor Relations Board (“the Board”) issued its decision in In re D.R. Horton, Inc., 357 NLRB No. 184, 2012 WL 36274 (2012), enf. denied in relevant part, 737 F.3d 344 (5th Cir. 2013), holding that the National Labor Relations Act (“NLRA”) prohibits agreements between employers and employees to arbitrate disputes on an individual basis, that decision has been widely disapproved by other courts. As the Fifth Circuit, Second Circuit, Eighth Circuit, California Supreme Court, and dozens of federal district courts have held, the D.R. Horton rule is irreconcilable with the FAA, which requires enforcement of arbitration agreements like petitioner’s according to their terms except in two limited circumstances. And as those same courts have also held, the Board’s insistence that the D.R. Horton rule qualifies for either or both of these two limited exceptions is misguided.

The first exception is found in Section 2 of the FAA itself, which provides that agreements to arbitrate must be enforced “save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract.” 9 U.S.C. § 2. The Supreme Court held in Concepcion that this provision did not save from preemption California’s rule that most class-action waivers in consumer arbitration provisions are unconscionable. The D.R. Horton rule is functionally identical to the California rule invalidated in Concepcion. Accordingly, as court after court has held, it does not come within Section 2's savings clause.

The second exception applies when a federal statute evinces a congressional command to override the FAA. But the NLRA, which the Board relies on as the basis for the D.R. Horton rule, does not evince such a command. As numerous courts have recognized, the NLRA's vague protection for "concerted activities" is not a sufficiently clear expression of congressional intent to override the FAA.

Because the D.R. Horton rule does not qualify for either of the FAA's exceptions, the FAA—not D.R. Horton—controls in this case. Under the FAA, the arbitration agreement used by petitioner is lawful and must be enforced according to its terms.

ARGUMENT

I. THE D.R. HORTON RULE IS PRECLUDED BY THE FAA.

The Supreme Court's decisions interpreting the FAA establish beyond doubt that agreements between employers and employees to arbitrate disputes are valid and enforceable. But rather than accept that clear conclusion, the Board has resisted it at every step.

The Board concedes that the D.R. Horton rule has “met a skeptical reception in the * * * courts.” On Assignment Staffing Servs., Inc., 362 NLRB No. 189, 2015 WL 5113231, at *12 (2015). That is putting it mildly. The D.R. Horton rule has been rejected by the overwhelming majority of courts that have considered it—including three federal courts of appeals and the California Supreme Court.³

³ See, e.g., D.R. Horton, 737 F.3d at 362; Sutherland v. Ernst & Young LLP, 726 F.3d 290, 297 n.8 (2d Cir. 2013); Owen v. Bristol Care, Inc., 702 F.3d 1050, 1055 (8th Cir. 2013); Iskanian v. CLS Transp. L.A., LLC, 327 P.3d 129, 142 (Cal. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 1155 (2015); see also Richards v. Ernst & Young, LLP, 744 F.3d 1072, 1075 n.3 (9th Cir. 2013) (noting that “the overwhelming majority of the district courts” have rejected D.R. Horton “on the ground that it conflicts with the explicit pronouncements of the Supreme Court concerning the policies undergirding the Federal Arbitration Act” and collecting cases); Pollard v. ETS PC, Inc., ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, 2016 WL 2983530, at *18 (D. Colo. 2016) (noting that “the Supreme Court has all but checkmated the NLRB’s position”).

The Seventh Circuit recently parted company with all of these other decisions. See Lewis v. Epic Sys. Corp., 2016 WL 3029464 (7th Cir. May 26, 2016). In so doing, that court made at least two fundamental errors. First, in holding that the Board’s rule declaring class waivers illegal is a generally applicable contract defense for purposes of Section 2’s savings clause (id. at *6), the Seventh Circuit overlooked the fact that the Supreme Court rejected a functionally indistinguishable argument in Concepcion. See pp. 9-11, infra. Second, in

But the Board has steadfastly continued to apply the D.R. Horton rule, asserting that it “need not apologize” for its position, no matter how many courts disagree with it. On Assignment, 2015 WL 5113231, at *12. Despite the Board’s relentless defense of it, however, the reasoning behind the D.R. Horton rule remains as flawed today as when the rule was first articulated.

A. The FAA Requires That Agreements To Arbitrate Disputes On An Individual Basis Be Enforced According To Their Terms.

The “Federal Arbitration Act reflects an ‘emphatic federal policy in favor of arbitral dispute resolution.’” KPMG LLP v. Cocchi, 132 S. Ct. 23, 25 (2011) (per curiam) (quoting Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 631 (1985)). Under the FAA, “courts must rigorously enforce arbitration agreements according to their terms, including terms that specify with whom the parties choose to arbitrate their disputes, and the rules under which that arbitration will be conducted.” Italian Colors, 133 S. Ct. at 2309 holding that the FAA and NLRA are reconcilable—and hence that there is no need to identify in the NLRA a clear congressional command to override the FAA—(id. at *7), the court overlooked the Supreme Court’s core holding in Concepcion that the purposes of the FAA will be thwarted if the enforceability of arbitration provisions is conditioned on the availability of class procedures. See pp. 10-11, 13, 24, infra.

(internal quotation marks, brackets, and citations omitted). In short, the FAA “makes arbitration agreements ‘valid, irrevocable, and enforceable’ as written.” Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 344 (quoting 9 U.S.C. § 2).

The FAA’s guarantee of enforceability applies with particular force to agreements that require the parties to arbitrate disputes on an individual basis and to forgo aggregating their claims through class or collective actions. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that such agreements are enforceable under the FAA. See Italian Colors, 133 S. Ct. at 2308-10 (holding that the FAA prohibits courts from “invalidat[ing] arbitration agreements on the ground that they do not permit class arbitration of a federal-law claim”) (internal quotation marks omitted); Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 340, 352 (holding that the FAA preempted California’s Discover Bank rule, which declared “most collective-arbitration waivers in consumer contracts” to be unconscionable); Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp., 500 U.S. 20, 32 (1991) (holding that employee’s claims under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (“ADEA”) must be arbitrated according to the terms of the parties’ arbitration agreement, “even if the arbitration could not go forward as a class action”) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Imburgia, 136 S. Ct. at 471 (reiterating that state courts must enforce arbitration agreements containing class waivers).

Petitioner's arbitration agreement, like the agreements at issue in the foregoing cases, requires disputes to be arbitrated on an individual basis. In that respect, the agreement is of precisely the sort that the Supreme Court has said must be enforced according to its terms.

B. Neither Of The Exceptions To The FAA's Mandate Applies Here.

In its decisions condemning arbitration agreements that require disputes to be resolved on an individual basis, the Board has invoked two exceptions to the FAA's mandate.⁴ First, the Board ar-

⁴ The Board has also suggested that it need not show that either exception to the FAA applies. In the Board's view, the NLRA stands outside the "established framework of the Supreme Court's Federal Arbitration Act jurisprudence," entitling the Board to devise its own approach that "accommodate[s] both the NLRA and the FAA." Murphy Oil USA, Inc., 361 NLRB No. 72, 2014 WL 5465454, at *9-10 (2014) (emphasis in original), enf. denied in relevant part, 808 F.3d 1013 (5th Cir. 2015).

This position is misguided. The Supreme Court has already spelled out how courts and agencies are to strike the balance between the FAA and other statutes, stating that the FAA controls unless the other statute contains a "contrary congressional command" gues that its interpretation of the NLRA is a generally applicable “ground[] * * * for the revocation of any contract” that comes within the FAA’s “savings clause.” D.R. Horton, 2012 WL 36274, at *14 (internal quotation marks omitted); Murphy Oil, 2014 WL 5465454, at *11. Second, the Board contends that the NLRA “amounts to a ‘contrary congressional command’ overriding the FAA.” Murphy Oil, 2014 WL 5465454, at *12. But as many courts have concluded, both of these assertions are wrong. In fact, both are foreclosed by Supreme Court precedent.

- 1. The Supreme Court has already held that the savings clause does not apply to rules that condition the enforcement of arbitration provisions on the availability of classwide procedures.

The FAA’s savings clause allows courts to refuse to enforce arbitration agreements only on grounds that apply equally to “any contract.” 9 U.S.C. § 2. The D.R. Horton rule is not nearly so evenhanded. On the contrary, it disfavors arbitration agreements in a way that the FAA forbids.

that overrides the FAA. See, e.g., Shearson/Am. Express Inc. v. McMahon, 482 U.S. 220, 226 (1987). The Board is free to argue that some other statute governing employment agreements does override the FAA—but it is not free to argue that the FAA’s framework is inapplicable.

In arguing that the D.R. Horton rule falls within the savings clause, the Board relies on the following syllogism: Under the savings clause, general defenses that would serve to nullify any contract also bar enforcement of arbitration provisions; one such general contract defense is illegality; individual contracts that prospectively restrict Section 7 rights are unlawful under the NLRA as a general matter; and, therefore, illegality under the NLRA (including the D.R. Horton rule) falls within the savings-clause exception to the FAA. See Murphy Oil, 2014 WL 5465454, at *11.

But this is precisely the same syllogism that the respondents in Concepcion invoked in defense of California's Discover Bank rule, which barred the enforcement of consumer arbitration provisions that did not permit classwide procedures. They argued that "[t]he savings clause expressly preserves state-law contract principles that do not discriminate against arbitration"; that "the principle that class action waivers are, under certain circumstances, unconscionable as unlawfully exculpatory is a principle of California law that does not specifically apply to arbitration agreements, but to contracts generally"; and that "[t]he approach courts have taken to class-action bans in nonarbitration agreements * * * demonstrates that the California Supreme Court and other courts that have reached the same conclusion are concerned with aggregation, not arbitration.” Br. for Resp’ts at 13, 21, AT&T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion, 563 U.S. 333 (2011) (No. 09-893), 2010 WL 4411292, at *13, *21 (quoting Discover Bank v Superior Court of L.A., 113 P.3d 1100, 1112 (Cal. 2005)).

The Supreme Court flatly rejected this syllogism, explaining that “[a]lthough § 2’s saving clause preserves generally applicable contract defenses, nothing in it suggests an intent to preserve state-law rules that stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the FAA’s objectives.” Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 343. Observing that “[t]he overarching purpose of the FAA, evident in the text of §§ 2, 3, and 4, is to ensure the enforcement of arbitration agreements according to their terms so as to facilitate streamlined proceedings,” the Court held that “[r]equiring the availability of classwide arbitration interferes with fundamental attributes of arbitration and thus creates a scheme inconsistent with the FAA.” Id. at 344. That is because superimposing class proceedings on arbitration “sacrifices the principal advantage of arbitration—its informality—and makes the process slower, more costly, and more likely to generate procedural morass than final judgment.” Id. at 348. In addition, given the “higher stakes” of classwide arbitration and the limits on judicial review of arbitral awards, conditioning the enforcement of arbitration provisions on the availability of classwide procedures would create an “unacceptable” risk for defendants, causing them to avoid arbitration rather than to employ it as Congress intended. Id. at 350-51.

The Board has sought to distinguish Concepcion on the ground that “here we deal not with State statutes or judge-made rules, but with the core provisions and policies of two Federal labor-law statutes.” Murphy Oil, 2014 WL 5465454, at *21. But the savings clause draws no distinction based on the source of the ostensibly neutral contract-law defense. Moreover, while the Court did hold in Concepcion that “nothing in [Section 2’s savings clause] suggests an intent to preserve state-law rules that stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the FAA’s objectives” (563 U.S. at 343), it made clear in Italian Colors that the same principle applies to federal-law rules. In that case, the Court rejected the argument that the policies underlying the antitrust laws require invalidation of arbitration provisions containing class waivers, explaining:

Truth to tell, our decision in [Concepcion] all but resolves this case. There we invalidated a law conditioning enforcement of arbitration on the availability of class procedure because that law “interfere[d] with fundamental attributes of arbitration.”

Italian Colors, 133 S. Ct. at 2312 (quoting Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 344).

The Board is equally misguided in seeking to distinguish Concepcion on the ground that the D.R. Horton rule allows employers to “insist that arbitral proceedings be conducted on an individual basis” as long as employees retain the option to bring class actions in court. See D.R. Horton, 2012 WL 36274, at *16. Like the Board, the respondents in Concepcion pointed out that “California law is neutral as to whether classwide proceedings take place in arbitration or in court.” Br. for Resp’ts at 54, AT&T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion, 563 U.S. 333 (2011) (No. 09-893), 2010 WL 4411292, at *54. But the Supreme Court held that this kind of hybrid approach would undermine the objectives of arbitration, explaining that while “[c]onsumers remain free to bring and resolve their disputes on a bilateral basis under Discover Bank, and some may well do so,” “there is little incentive for lawyers to arbitrate on behalf of individuals when they may do so for a class and reap far higher fees in the process,” and “faced with inevitable class arbitration, companies would have less incentive to continue resolving potentially duplicative claims on an individual basis.” Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 347.

In short, the Board’s protestations notwithstanding, Concepcion is controlling on the question whether the D.R. Horton rule falls within the savings clause. See Iskanian, 327 P.3d at 142 (“We do not find persuasive the Board’s attempt to distinguish its [D.R. Horton] rule from Discover Bank.”). Under Concepcion, even assuming that the D.R. Horton rule “applies equally to arbitration and nonarbitration agreements,” by requiring the availability of class procedures, it “interferes with fundamental attributes of arbitration and, for that reason, disfavors arbitration in practice.” Id. at 141. Accordingly, “in light of Concepcion, the Board’s [D.R. Horton] rule is not covered by the FAA’s savings clause.” Id.

2. The NLRA does not evince a “contrary congressional command” sufficient to override the FAA.

The only other circumstance in which courts may refuse to enforce arbitration agreements containing class waivers is when “the FAA’s mandate has been ‘overridden by a contrary congressional command’” in another federal statute. CompuCredit Corp. v. Green- wood, 132 S. Ct. 665, 669 (2012) (quoting McMahon, 482 U.S. at 226). This congressional command must be clearly expressed; if the other statute is “silent on whether claims * * * can proceed in an arbitrable forum, the FAA requires [an] arbitration agreement to be enforced according to its terms.” Id. at 673.

To be sure, as the Supreme Court has emphasized, some federal statutes do expressly override the FAA. CompuCredit, 132 S. Ct. at 672. For example, in 2002 Congress enacted a law providing that “whenever a motor vehicle franchise contract provides for the use of arbitration to resolve a controversy arising out of or relating to such contract, arbitration may be used to settle such controversy only if after such controversy arises all parties to such controversy consent in writing to use arbitration to settle such controversy.” Id. (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1226(a)(2)). And in the Dodd-Frank Act of 2010, Congress amended the Commodity Exchange Act to add a whistleblower program and provided that “[n]o predispute arbitration agreement shall be valid or enforceable, if the agreement requires arbitration of a dispute arising under this section.” Id. (quoting 7 U.S.C. § 26(n)(2)).

But the NLRA does not speak with anything remotely approaching the “clarity” with which Congress “restricted the use of arbitration” (id.) in these statutes. In fact, the NLRA makes no mention of either arbitration or class/collective actions. The Supreme Court has never found a federal statute to evince a congressional command sufficient to override the FAA, let alone when the statute at issue does not even mention arbitration or class/collective actions.⁵

As the Fifth Circuit observed, there is “no argument” that the text of the NLRA evinces an intent to override the FAA. D.R. Horton, 737 F.3d at 360.⁶ The NLRA’s legislative history similarly fails to ⁵ See CompuCredit, 132 S. Ct. at 673 (Credit Repair Organizations Act (“CROA”) does not displace FAA); Gilmer, 500 U.S. at 35 (Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 does not displace FAA); Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 480, 484 (1989) (Securities Act of 1933 does not displace FAA); McMahon, 482 U.S. at 238, 242 (Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act do not displace FAA); Mitsubishi Motors, 473 U.S. at 640 (Sherman Act does not displace FAA); see also Green Tree Fin. Corp.-Ala. v. Randolph, 531 U.S. 79, 90 (2000) (noting parties’ agreement that the Truth in Lending Act does not “evince[] an intention to preclude a waiver of judicial remedies”).

⁶ Indeed, the Board concedes that “the NLRA does not explicitly override the FAA.” Murphy Oil, 2014 WL 5465454, at *12. Asserting that the FAA was not thought to apply to employment contracts at address the issue: It “only supports a congressional intent to ‘level the playing field’ between workers and employers by empowering unions to engage in collective bargaining.” D.R. Horton, 737 F.3d at 361. Congress “did not discuss the right to file class or consolidated claims against employers” at all. Id.; accord Iskanian, 327 P.3d at 141 (“As the Fifth Circuit explained, neither the NLRA’s text nor its legislative history contains a congressional command prohibiting [class] waivers.”).

The fact that the NLRA is “silent” on the issue of arbitration should be the end of the matter. See CompuCredit, 132 S. Ct. at 673. The Board’s various arguments to the contrary are unpersuasive.

the time the NLRA was enacted, it contends that no “explicit[]” reference to arbitration is required. Id. This reasoning is misguided. When the Sherman and Clayton Acts were enacted, the FAA did not even exist—yet the Supreme Court has held that those statutes do not override the FAA, because they “do not evince an intention to preclude a waiver of class-action procedure” or of judicial remedies generally. Italian Colors, 133 S. Ct. at 2309 (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted); see also Mitsubishi Motors, 473 U.S. at 628 (explaining that the necessary congressional intent to preclude arbitration must “be deducible from text or legislative history”). If it is appropriate to require that a statute’s text and legislative history show an intent to override the FAA with respect to the antitrust laws, which predate the FAA altogether, a fortiori it is appropriate to require that showing with respect to the NLRA.

First, the Board contends that Section 7 of the NLRA (29 U.S.C. § 157) implicitly overrides the FAA because it protects employees’ right to engage in “concerted activities.” But as the Fifth Circuit observed, Section 7’s reference to concerted activities could not “implicitly” protect class and collective actions, because the NLRA was enacted “prior to the advent in 1966 of modern class action practice” (D.R. Horton, 737 F.3d at 362 (emphasis added); see also Iskanian, 327 P.3d at 141) and the adoption of the Fair Labor Standards Act’s collective-action provision in 1947. Thus, Congress could not have intended to protect “a right of access to” “procedure[s] that did not exist” when the NLRA was enacted (D.R. Horton, 737 F.3d at 362), much less to override the FAA in doing so.⁷

The Supreme Court employed this precise reasoning in Italian Colors. There, the Court held that the antitrust laws did not evince an intent to preclude arbitration provisions containing class-action waivers, in part because the Sherman and Clayton Acts “make no mention of class actions. In fact, they were enacted decades before the advent of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23.” Italian Colors, 133 S. Ct. at 2309. By the same token, because the NLRA long predated the advent of class and collective actions, it cannot be deemed to be a congressional command to condition enforcement of arbitration provisions on the availability of class procedures. See Iskanian, 327 P.3d at 141 (citing Italian Colors, 133 S. Ct. at 2309).⁸

⁷ The Board relies on Eastex, Inc. v. NLRB, 437 U.S. 556 (1978), for the proposition that Section 7 creates a “right” to engage in class or collective actions. See Murphy Oil, 2014 WL 5465454, at *9. It badly over reads that decision, however. Eastex held only that Section 7 “protects employees from retaliation by their employers when they seek to improve working conditions through resort to administrative and judicial forums” (437 U.S. at 565-66); it neither held nor implied that employees have an absolute right to pursue classwide resolution of causes of action under other statutes.

⁸ The Board has argued that it does not matter that the NLRA predated Rule 23 because “[g]roup litigation * * * has long been part of the Anglo-American legal tradition.” Murphy Oil, 2014 WL 5465454, at *19. The Seventh Circuit has embraced that argument. See Lewis, 2016 WL 3029464, at *3. But both the Board and the Seventh Circuit miss the point. As the Supreme Court has emphasized, whatever forms of group litigation existed before Rule 23 bore little resemblance to the damages class action that Rule 23 created. See Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 614-15 (1997) (noting that the opt-out damages class action was an “adventuresome innovation”) (internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, the NLRA clearly could not have created any substantive right to that form of concerted legal action. And in any event, the Supreme Court has rejected the functionally identical argument that the antitrust laws—which were also passed at a time when group litigation was ostensibly “part of the Anglo-American legal tradition”—forbade class waivers. Italian Colors, 133 S. Ct. at 2309.

Temporal problems aside, the Supreme Court and other courts have repeatedly explained that the right of a litigant to invoke class or collective action mechanisms “is a procedural right only, ancillary to the litigation of substantive claims.” Deposit Guar. Nat’l Bank, Jackson, Miss. v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326, 332 (1980) (emphasis added); see also, e.g., Amchem Prods., 521 U.S. at 612-13 (noting that Rule 23 does not “abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right”) (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b)); D.R. Horton, 737 F.3d at 357 (“The use of class action procedures[] * * * is not a substantive right.”). The Board cannot transform an inherently procedural device into a substantive entitlement simply by declaring it to be within the ambit of Section 7.

Indeed, the Board’s concession in D.R. Horton that Section 7 does not create a substantive right to obtain class certification and instead creates “only” a right to seek class certification (2012 WL 36274, at *12 n.24, *19) confirms that the right that the Board envisions is procedural, not substantive. By making this concession, the Board has acknowledged that Section 7 adds nothing to what Rule 23 itself provides. And the Supreme Court has “already rejected th[e] proposition” that “federal law secures a nonwaivable,” substantive “opportunity to vindicate federal policies by satisfying the procedural strictures of Rule 23 or invoking * * * class mechanism[s] in arbitration.” Italian Colors, 133 S. Ct. at 2310 (citing Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 344).

Even if Section 7 could be read to create a “substantive” right of access to class- or collective-action mechanisms, however, that would still not be sufficient to override the FAA. The CROA expressly allows plaintiffs to bring actions in court and prohibits the waiver of “any right * * * under this sub-chapter,” but the Supreme Court held that these were “commonplace” provisions incapable of “do[ing] the heavy lifting” necessary to displace the FAA. CompuCredit, 132 S. Ct. at 669-70 (internal quotation marks omitted). The ADEA goes even further, expressly providing for collective actions (29 U.S.C. § 626(b))—yet the Supreme Court held that this was likewise insufficient to override the FAA. Gilmer, 500 U.S. at 32; see also Italian Colors, 133 S. Ct. at 2311 (“In Gilmer, supra, we had no qualms in enforcing a class waiver in an arbitration agreement even though the federal statute at issue, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, expressly permitted collective actions.”). If the CROA’s and the ADEA’s language did not provide the necessary “contrary congressional command,” Section 7’s far vaguer reference to “concerted activit[y]” surely does not either.

Second, the Board maintains that the arbitration agreements in CompuCredit, Gilmer, and the Supreme Court’s other “congressional command” cases were enforceable because the plaintiffs in those cases could still assert their “statutory rights,” and the question was simply whether class or collective actions were available as a “means to vindicate” those rights. Murphy Oil, 2014 WL 5465454, at *10. By contrast, it contends, in cases like this one, “it is the NLRA that is the source of the relevant, substantive right to pursue * * * claims concertedly.” Id. Thus, it concludes, Section 7 overrides the FAA because the Supreme Court has said that even under the FAA, arbitration agreements may not waive federal “statutory rights.” Id.

This purported distinction of the “congressional command” cases is patently invalid. The Supreme Court’s decisions establish that the “statutory rights” that must not be waived in an arbitration agreement are causes of action—not “process rights concerning how [a] claim is adjudicated.” Murphy Oil, 361 NLRB No. 72, slip op. at 52 (Member Johnson, dissenting). Thus, the agreement to arbitrate in CompuCredit was enforceable because it preserved “the legal power to impose liability” under the CROA. CompuCredit, 132 S. Ct. at 671 (emphasis added). Similarly, in Mitsubishi Motors the Court held that agreements to arbitrate antitrust claims were enforceable because a plaintiff could still “vindicate its statutory cause of action in the arbitral forum, [and] the statute [would] continue to serve both its remedial and deterrent function.” 473 U.S. at 637 (emphasis added). Because employees can still assert any and all statutory causes of action in individual arbitration, enforcement of arbitration agreements does not run afoul of the Court’s admonitions about waivers of “statutory rights.”⁹

Finally, the Board asserts that insofar as there is an “inherent conflict” between the policies of the FAA and the NLRA, the FAA should give way because the NLRA’s policies are more compelling. Murphy Oil, 2014 WL 5465454, at *13. Specifically, the Board asserts that whereas Section 7 “manifests a strong federal policy” in favor of concerted action, “any intrusion on the policies underlying the FAA” by the D.R. Horton rule is “limited” because that rule applies only to one type of arbitration agreements—those in the employment context—and because employment class actions typically involve a small number of plaintiffs. D.R. Horton, 2012 WL 36274, at *14-15. Thus, the Board contends, prohibiting agreements to arbitrate on an individual basis is the proper way to “accommodate[]” the policies of the two statutes. Id. at *15.

⁹ As one district court put it in rejecting the Board’s attempt to distinguish away the Supreme Court’s FAA precedents, “[o]f course, none of these decisions specifically addresses the NLRA. But experienced chess players know when they have been inexorably outmaneuvered, and will extend a hand of resignation before checkmate. Here, the Supreme Court has all but checkmated the NLRB’s position.” Pollard, 2016 WL 2983530, at *18.

But the Board has gotten the policy considerations exactly backwards. Even within the realm of employer-employee legal disputes, enforcing arbitration agreements like petitioner’s scarcely impinges at all on employees’ concerted activities. Employees can still “speak to other employees about suspected violations of laws affecting their working conditions, actually solicit other employees to join with them in asserting such claims in court or arbitration, pool financial resources to fund the litigation, and actively participate with other employees as litigants in the case”; they simply cannot access one “particular litigation mechanism.” Murphy Oil, 361 NLRB No. 72, slip op. at 42 (Member Johnson, dissenting) (emphasis added) (footnotes omitted). And, of course, enforcing arbitration agreements containing class waivers has no effect whatever on the many other forms of Section 7 activity—including the prototypical Section 7 activities of organizing, striking, and collective bargaining—that have nothing to do with legal disputes.

By contrast, the D.R. Horton rule strikes at the heart of the policies underlying the FAA. Although the Board has noted that the D.R. Horton rule does not preclude arbitration altogether, but instead conditions the enforceability of arbitration agreements on the availability of class- or collective-action procedures in some forum (D.R. Horton, 2012 WL 36274, at *16), that observation is irrelevant: Concepcion squarely held that the FAA prohibits “conditioning the enforceability of certain arbitration agreements on the availability of classwide arbitration procedures,” because imposing class procedures on arbitration “interferes with fundamental attributes of arbitration” and thus directly undermines the goals of the FAA. Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 336, 344. And although it is true that the D.R. Horton rule applies only to one type of arbitration agreement, that fact is likewise irrelevant. The plaintiffs in Gilmer, CompuCredit, and the other “congressional command” cases also were arguing for rules that would have interfered with arbitration only in a limited number of cases (those involving particular statutes). But the Supreme Court held in each of those cases that the FAA controlled.

II. REJECTING THE D.R. HORTON RULE WILL BENEFIT EMPLOYEES, BUSINESSES, AND THE NATIONAL ECONOMY.

In the Board's view, any waiver of the option to bring class actions is a per se violation of the federal right to undertake concerted action, regardless of the basis for the substantive legal claims. But as the Supreme Court recognized in Concepcion and Stolt-Nielsen, arbitration is by its very nature individualized; superimposing collective- or class-action procedures on it would sacrifice the cost savings, informality, and expedition of traditional, individual arbitration. As a practical matter, given these trade-offs, no company would willingly enter into collective or class arbitration. See Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 350 (“[w]e find it hard to believe that defendants would” enter into agreements permitting class arbitration); Stolt-Nielsen S.A. v. AnimalFeeds Int’l Corp., 559 U.S. 662, 685 (2010) (“class-action arbitration changes the nature of arbitration to such a degree that it cannot be presumed the parties consented to it by simply agreeing to submit their disputes to an arbitrator”). Rather, conditioning the enforcement of arbitration provisions on the availability of class procedures would lead employers to abandon arbitration altogether—to the detriment of employees, businesses, and the economy as a whole.¹⁰ Arbitration is faster, easier, and less expensive than litigation. The Supreme Court has repeatedly observed, therefore, that “arbitration’s advantages often would seem helpful to individuals * * * who need a less expensive alternative to litigation.” Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson, 513 U.S. 265, 280 (1995); see also, e.g., Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 345 (“the informality of arbitral proceedings * * * reduc[es] the cost and increas[es] the speed of dispute resolution”); Stolt-Nielsen, 559 U.S. at 685 (observing that “the benefits of private dispute resolution” include “lower costs” and “greater efficiency and speed”); 14 Penn Plaza LLC v. Pyett, 556 U.S. 247, 257 (2009) (“Parties generally favor arbitration precisely because of the economics of dispute resolution.”). Indeed, the Court has specifically recognized that “[a]rbitration agreements allow parties to avoid the costs of litigation, a benefit that may be of particular importance in employment litigation, which often involves smaller sums of money than disputes concerning commercial contracts.” Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams, 532 U.S. 105, 123 (2001) (emphasis added).

¹⁰ The Board has suggested that employers could be allowed to require bilateral arbitration of individualized disputes as long as they allow class/collective actions in court. D.R. Horton, 2012 WL 36274, at *16. As the Supreme Court has explained, however, if required to submit to class procedures, “companies would have less incentive to continue resolving potentially duplicative claims on an individual basis.” Concepcion, 563 U.S. at 347. That kind of roadblock to arbitration is precisely what the FAA was enacted to eradicate. Id. at 345 (“[O]ur cases place it beyond dispute that the FAA was designed to promote arbitration.”).

These benefits of arbitration are especially pronounced for employees with individualized claims that are not amenable to being brought on a class or collective basis—the most common type of employee dispute. If employees did not have access to simplified, low-cost arbitration and were forced into court to adjudicate disputes, they would very often be priced out of the judicial system entirely and hence would be left with no recourse or means to seek redress of their grievances. By contrast, the American Arbitration Association frequently handles employment disputes involving modest sums, making it possible for employees to bring claims that otherwise would have gone unremedied. See, e.g., Elizabeth Hill, AAA Employment Arbitration: A Fair Forum at Low Cost, 58 DISP. RESOL. J. 9, 11 (2003). For many employees, in other words, the choice is “arbitration—or nothing.” Theodore J. St. Antoine, Mandatory Arbitration: Why It’s Better Than It Looks, 41 U. MICH. J.L. REFORM 783, 792 (2008).

Employees also benefit from the informality of arbitration, which frees them from the procedural and evidentiary hurdles that often stymie plaintiffs in traditional, judicial-system litigation. See, e.g., JOHN W. COOLEY & STEVEN LUBET, ARBITRATION ADVOCACY ¶ 1.3.1, at 5 (2d ed. 2003). Likely for that reason, employees tend to fare better in arbitration: Studies have shown that those who arbitrate their claims are more likely to prevail than those who go to court. See, e.g., Lewis L. Maltby, Private Justice: Employment Arbitration and Civil Rights, 30 COLUM. HUM. RTS. L. REV. 29, 46 (1998).

For example, one study of employment arbitration in the securities industry found that employees who arbitrated were 12% more likely to win their disputes than were employees who litigated in the Southern District of New York. See Michael Delikat & Morris M. Kleiner, An Empirical Study of Dispute Resolution Mechanisms: Where Do Plaintiffs Better Vindicate Their Rights?, 58 DISP. RESOL. J. 56, 58 (Nov. 2003-Jan. 2004). And the arbitral awards that the employees obtained were typically the same as, or larger than, the court awards. See id.

Moreover, because of both its informality and its celerity, arbitration is often less contentious than litigation, enabling employees to resolve disputes without permanently damaging their relationships with their employers and coworkers. And because one of the hallmarks of employment arbitration is confidentiality, this alternative-dispute-resolution mechanism reduces the risk that potentially embarrassing information about an employee will become public—including even the very fact that the employee pursued a claim against the employer, which may benefit the employee if she applies for a job at another employer in the future.

Nor are employees who have grievances the only ones who benefit from arbitration. On the contrary, the benefits also extend to those who never have a dispute with their employer, because arbitration “lower[s] [businesses’] dispute-resolution costs,” which results in “wage increase[s]” for employees. Stephen J. Ware, The Case for Enforcing Adhesive Arbitration Agreements—With Particular Consideration of Class Actions and Arbitration Fees, 5 J. AM. ARB. 251, 254-56 (2006).

If the Board's arguments were accepted and its decision here upheld, all these benefits would be lost. Employees, consumers, businesses, and the national economy would all be worse off; and the many employment disputes in this Circuit that are routinely and effectively arbitrated every day would be diverted to an already-clogged court system—the very scenario that the FAA was designed to prevent.

CONCLUSION

The petition for review should be granted, and the Board's Order should be denied enforcement.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Evan M. Tager

ANDREW J. PINCUS

EVAN M. TAGER

ARCHIS A. PARASHARAMI

MATTHEW A. WARING

Mayer Brown LLP

1999 K Street NW

Washington, DC 20006

(202) 263-3000

KATE COMERFORD TODD

WARREN POSTMAN

U.S. Chamber Litigation Center

1615 H Street NW

Washington, DC 20062

(202) 463-5337

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

Dated: July 29, 2016

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 32(a)(7)(C), the undersigned counsel for amicus curiae the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America certifies that this brief:

(i) complies with the type-volume limitation of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(7)(B) because it contains 6,213 words, including footnotes and excluding the parts of the brief exempted by Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(7)(B)(iii) and Circuit Rule 32(e)(1); and

(ii) complies with the typeface requirements of Rule 32(a)(5) and the type style requirements of Rule 32(a)(6) because it has been prepared using Microsoft Office Word 2007 and is set in Century Schoolbook font in a size equivalent to 14 points or larger.

Dated: July 29, 2016

/s/ Evan M. Tager

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that I electronically filed the foregoing Brief of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America as Amicus Curiae Supporting Petitioner with the Clerk of the Court for the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit by using the appellate CM/ECF system on July 29, 2016.

I certify that all participants in the case are registered CM/ECF users and that service will be accomplished by the appellate CM/ECF system.

Dated: July 29, 2016

/s/ Evan M. Tager