

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MINNESOTA

LABNET INC. D/B/A WORKLAW®
NETWORK, et al.,

PLAINTIFFS,

v.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, et al.,

DEFENDANTS.

Case No. 0:16-cv-00844-PJS-JSM

Judge Patrick Schiltz

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

Adam G. Unikowsky*
JENNER & BLOCK LLP
1099 New York Ave, NW
Washington, DC 20001
(202) 639-6041

Kate Comerford Todd*
Steven P. Lehotsky*
Warren Postman*
U.S. CHAMBER LITIGATION CENTER
1615 H Street, NW
Washington, DC 20062
(202) 463-5337

Aaron D. Van Oort (MN No. 315539)
Nicholas J. Nelson (MN No. 391984)
FAEGRE BAKER DANIELS LLP
2200 Wells Fargo Center
90 S. Seventh Street
Minneapolis, MN 55402
(612) 766-7000

Stuart R. Buttrick*
FAEGRE BAKER DANIELS LLP
300 N. Meridian Street, Suite 2700
Indianapolis, IN 46204
(317) 237-1038

Pro Hac Vice application pending*

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ii

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE..... 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT..... 5

I. DOL’s New Interpretation Is Unambiguously Foreclosed By The LMRDA. 6

 A. The Plain Meaning of the Statute Cannot Be Reconciled With DOL’s New Interpretation. 6

 B. Well-Established Canons of Construction Confirm That Congress
 Clearly Did Not Intend DOL’s New Interpretation. 11

 1. Context Precludes DOL’s New Interpretation. 11

 2. Constitutional Avoidance Precludes DOL’s New
 Interpretation. 15

 3. The Rule of Lenity Precludes DOL’s New Interpretation. 21

CONCLUSION 23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

Chamber of Commerce of United States v. Brown, 554 U.S. 60 (2008)..... 19

Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837 (1984)..... 4, 6

Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310 (2010) 15-16

Clark v. Martinez, 543 U.S. 371 (2005) 15, 22

Connally v. General Construction Co., 269 U.S. 385 (1926) 20

Davis v. Halpern, 768 F. Supp. 968 (E.D.N.Y. 1991) 9

Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Building & Construction Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568 (1988) 15

Entergy Corp. v. Riverkeeper, Inc., 556 U.S. 208 (2009) 5, 6

Esquivel-Quintana v. Lynch, 810 F.3d 1019 (6th Cir. 2016) 22

FCC v. Fox Television Stations, Inc., 132 S. Ct. 2307 (2012) 20

FDA v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120 (2000)..... 11

Good News Club v. Milford Central School, 533 U.S. 98 (2001)..... 18

Humphreys, Hutcheson & Moseley v. Donovan, 755 F.2d 1211 (6th Cir. 1985) 16

INS v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421 (1987)..... 11

INS v. National Center for Immigrants’ Rights, Inc., 502 U.S. 183 (1991)..... 8

International Union v. Dole, 869 F.2d 616 (D.C. Cir. 1989)..... 5, 12, 16, 22

Johnson v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2551 (2015)..... 19

Master Printers of America v. Donovan, 751 F.2d 700 (4th Cir. 1984) 16

McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93 (2003) 16

MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 512 U.S. 218 (1994)..... 6

McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Commission, 514 U.S. 334 (1995) 17

NLRB v. Pratt & Whitney Air Craft Div., 789 F.2d 121 (2d Cir. 1986)..... 14

Procter & Gamble Manufacturing Co., 160 NLRB 334 (1966) 13

Rosenberger v. Rector & Visitors of University of Virginia, 515 U.S. 819 (1995) 18

Skilling v. United States, 561 U.S. 358 (2010)..... 20

United States v. Bass, 404 U.S. 336 (1971)..... 21

United States v. Universal C. I. T. Credit Corp., 344 U.S. 218 (1952)..... 21

Whitman v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 352 (2014)..... 22

Williams-Yulee v. Florida Bar, 135 S. Ct. 1656 (2015)..... 18

STATUTES

29 U.S.C. § 433 2, 5, 21

29 U.S.C. § 433(b)..... 8

29 U.S.C. § 433(b)(1) 5, 6

29 U.S.C. § 433(c) 6, 8, 12, 13

29 U.S.C. § 439 21

LEGISLATIVE MATERIALS

S. Rep. No. 85-1684 (1958)..... 12

S. Rep. No. 86-187 (1959)..... 16

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Brian Cogan & Tony Kelso, Encyclopedia of Politics, the Media, and Popular Culture (2009)..... 9

Interpretation of the “Advice” in Exemption Section 203(c) of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, 81 Fed. Reg. 15,924 (Mar. 24, 2016)passim

Edward F. McQuarrie & Barbara J. Phillips, Indirect Persuasion in Advertising: How Consumers Process Metaphors Presented in Pictures and Words, 34 J. Advertising 7 (2005) 10

Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (10th ed. 2002) 7

Youjae Yi, Direct and Indirect Approaches to Advertising Persuasion: Which Is More Effective?, 20 J. Bus. Res. 279 (1990) 10

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America (the “Chamber”) is the world’s largest business federation. It represents 300,000 direct members and indirectly represents the interests of more than three million companies and professional organizations of every size, in every industry sector, from every region of the country. An important function of the Chamber is to represent the interests of its members in matters before Congress, the Executive Branch, and the courts. To that end, the Chamber regularly files amicus briefs in cases that raise issues of vital concern to the Nation’s business community.

The Chamber’s members, which include companies and law firms and even solo practitioners, have a strong interest in the outcome of this proceeding. From 1962 until the present, the Department of Labor (“DOL”) across administrations of both parties applied a clear and consistent interpretation of the advice exemption to the reporting requirements of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (“LMRDA”) for “persuader” activity. That interpretation of the LMRDA permitted lawyers, their firms, and non-lawyer consultants to provide recommendations on union-organizing matters to their clients without fear of breaching their ethical obligations with respect to client confidences. At the same time, it faithfully implemented the statutory requirement of disclosure by those who did not advise employers, but instead sought to directly or indirectly persuade employees on union-related issues.

The DOL’s new rule, however, abandons that well-established and longstanding interpretation, and imposes stringent disclosure obligations on attorneys, law firms, and consultants providing their employer clients what anyone would call “advice.” It raises serious constitutional questions regarding employers’ statutory and constitutional right to seek advice on how to communicate with their employees. It will chill the free exchange of ideas between employers and employees and will impose substantial compliance costs as employers and their attorneys are forced to grapple with DOL’s incoherent new guidelines. Of greatest concern, the DOL’s new interpretation of the advice exemption in the LMRDA—if allowed to take effect—threatens to expose thousands of lawyers, law firms, and companies to potential criminal liability for failure to abide by an exceedingly vague interpretation of the LMRDA.

For these reasons, the Chamber submits this brief on behalf of its members’ interests and in support of a preliminary injunction. To minimize duplication, the Chamber does not address the irreparable injury, balance of the equities, and public interest requirements, and instead focuses on two issues of statutory interpretation and administrative law before the Court. On all scores, however, the Chamber supports the Plaintiffs on their arguments.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The DOL’s interpretation of the reporting obligations imposed by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, 29 U.S.C. § 433, is contrary to the unambiguous statutory text. Section 433(b) imposes certain reporting obligations for employers and third-party consultants that agree to engage in activity to persuade employees, directly or indirectly, to join (or not to join) a union. The statute carves out from that reporting requirement the provision of “advice.” Since 1962, DOL consistently has construed “advice” to encompass communications between an employer and its lawyers or other consultants where the employer was receiving recommendations on how to proceed, which the employer was of course able to follow or to decline.

But DOL, abandoning a bipartisan interpretation that had offered clear bright lines for employers, lawyers, and other consultants, has now announced a new, artificially narrow interpretation of “advice.” Interpretation of the “Advice” Exemption in Section 203(c) of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, 81 Fed. Reg. 15,924 (Mar. 24, 2016). This new interpretation excludes many communications that are obviously “advice” under the ordinary meaning of that term—such as a consultant’s suggestions on how to write a persuasive speech, or a recommendation from a law firm about a best course of action.

DOL contends that its cramped interpretation of “advice” is necessary because the prior interpretation did not give sufficient weight to the LMRDA’s requirement that both “direct” and “indirect” persuasion activities be reported. But that is simply not true. DOL’s longstanding interpretation did not render meaningless the reporting obligations for “indirect” persuader activity. Indeed, the D.C. Circuit previously found DOL’s prior interpretation to be permissible—and DOL’s rulemaking expressly concedes that it was. Int’l Union v. Dole, 869 F.2d 616, 620 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (R.B. Ginsburg, J.); 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,941. In finding its prior interpretation inadequate, DOL overlooked an interpretation of “indirect persuasion” that is perfectly compatible with the ordinary meaning of “advice.” “Direct persuasion” refers to communications that forthrightly advocate a particular view of unionization, while “indirect persuasion” means persuasion through more subtle or oblique methods, such as statements endorsing a particular worldview or providing factual information without specifically opining on whether an employee should join a union. By its plain terms, the statute covers both forms of persuasive communications to employees, while exempting communications to employers that any English speaker would characterize as “advice.”

Furthermore, DOL’s new interpretation of the LMRDA’s advice exemption is also contrary to the basic canons of statutory construction. For more than five decades, DOL maintained a clear, administrable interpretation of the advice exemption that cohered with the overall statutory context and scheme of the LMRDA and that advanced the intent of Congress. That longstanding interpretation avoided serious constitutional questions under the First Amendment and the Fifth Amendment—questions that DOL’s new interpretation raises, rather than avoids. Those issues are particularly important because violations of the reporting requirements for persuader activity in the LMRDA are subject to criminal penalties, and the rule of lenity requires that any statutory ambiguity be resolved in favor of lenity. Therefore, if there is any doubt as to the statute’s proper interpretation, then DOL’s prior, narrower interpretation of the reporting requirement and its broader interpretation of the advice exemption must govern. Because the statute, when interpreted in light of these canons, clearly precludes DOL’s interpretation, that interpretation must be rejected under Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 842 (1984).

ARGUMENT

Plaintiffs seek to enjoin DOL from implementing and enforcing its new interpretation of the scope of the reporting obligations imposed by the LMRDA, 29 U.S.C. § 433. The agency adopted this new interpretation in a final rule published on March 24, 2016 (“the Rule”). 81 Fed. Reg. 15,924. Under the Rule, many agreements between employers and law firms or non-lawyer consultants, which previously were exempt under the LMRDA’s advice exemption, now will be subject to the statute’s reporting requirements on the ground that they involve “indirect[]” persuasion of employees, 29 U.S.C. § 433(b)(1), and do not constitute “giv[ing] advice,” id. § 433(c). DOL previously interpreted the advice exemption to apply where, for example, a lawyer provided advice to an employer regarding union-organizing activities notwithstanding that the advice, if accepted by the employer, might result in the lawyer indirectly facilitating the employer’s efforts to persuade employees not to join a union.

But now DOL interprets the reporting obligation to apply unless the lawyer or other consultant is engaged solely in advice that does not indirectly persuade. Because that new interpretation cannot be reconciled with the plain meaning of the statute, is contrary to the context and congressional purpose of the LMRDA, and is foreclosed by several established interpretive principles, it is entitled to no deference and should be set aside.

I. DOL’s New Interpretation Is Unambiguously Foreclosed By The LMRDA.

Under the Chevron framework, an agency’s interpretation governs “if it is a reasonable interpretation of the statute.” Entergy Corp. v. Riverkeeper, Inc., 556 U.S.

208, 218 (2009) (citing Chevron, 467 U.S. at 843-44). If DOL’s interpretation is contrary to the clear meaning of the LMRDA, then “that is the end of the matter; for the court, as well as the agency, must give effect to the unambiguously expressed intent of Congress.” Chevron, 467 U.S. at 842-43. That is because any such interpretation would be unreasonable as a matter of law. Entergy, 556 U.S. at 218 n.4 (“[I]f Congress has directly spoken to an issue then any agency interpretation contradicting what Congress has said would be unreasonable.”). In assessing whether an interpretation is reasonable, the Court should employ all of the “traditional tools of statutory construction.” Chevron, 467 U.S. at 843 n.9. Here, application of those traditional tools demonstrates that DOL’s new interpretation of the LMRDA “goes beyond the meaning that the statute can bear.” MCI Telecomms. Corp. v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 512 U.S. 218, 229 (1994).

A. The Plain Meaning of the Statute Cannot Be Reconciled With DOL’s New Interpretation.

As traditionally understood, the LMRDA sets up a straightforward two-step inquiry. First, the statute imposes a reporting obligation on “activities where an object thereof is, directly or indirectly . . . to persuade employees” regarding unionization. 29 U.S.C. § 433(b)(1). Second, the statute carves out an exemption from the reporting requirement for certain activities, including “giv[ing] advice to [an] employer.” Id. § 433(c). Thus, the statute applies the reporting obligation to all activities motivated by a particular purpose—i.e., persuading employees regarding unionization—unless those activities constitute the giving of advice.

DOL's new interpretation transforms this straightforward statutory scheme into a complex and unadministrable hash. DOL reads the statute to create two mutually exclusive categories of activities: activities the "object" of which is to "persuade employees," and the giving of advice. According to DOL, if the purpose of a communication with an employer is to persuade employees not to join a union, then the communication cannot be "advice." But this is obviously incorrect: many communications are both "advice" and intended to persuade. Suppose, for example, that an employer has drafted a speech to deliver to employees about the potential consequences of unionization. The employer contacts a consultant and specifically asks for "advice" about the speech. The consultant answers that her "advice" is to strike a more conciliatory tone, including, perhaps, by using certain suggested language in lieu of some of the original phrasing. Any English speaker would agree that the consultant has offered "advice" about the speech. Yet DOL's new interpretation would hold that this was not "advice" at all, because it had the ultimate object of helping the employer better persuade the employees. See, e.g., 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,927 (advice exemption does not encompass "revising employer-created materials . . . if an 'object' of the revisions is to enhance persuasion"); id. at 15,939 ("revising an employer created document to further dissuade employees from supporting the union[] will trigger reporting"). That newly invented definition of "advice" simply cannot be reconciled with the plain meaning of the word. See, e.g., Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (10th ed. 2002) (defining "advice" as "recommendation regarding a decision or course of conduct: counsel").

DOL justified its extraordinary definition of “advice” as an effort to ensure that the advice exemption does not “override” the otherwise-applicable reporting obligation. 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,926. But “overriding” something is exactly what an exemption is supposed to do. Congress imposed a broad reporting obligation and then overrode it—in part—by exempting specified activities, including giving advice. If there were any doubt, the section’s heading makes its function crystal clear: it makes “[a]dvisory or representative services exempt from filing requirements.” 29 U.S.C. § 433(c) (emphasis added); see INS v. Nat’l Ctr. for Immigrants’ Rights, Inc., 502 U.S. 183, 189 (1991) (“[T]he title of a statute or section can aid in resolving an ambiguity in the legislation’s text.”). DOL’s effort to define persuader activities and advice-giving so that they form non-overlapping categories is thus unnecessary, and indeed squarely at odds with the exemption regime that Congress adopted.

According to DOL, however, the agency’s cramped reading of the “advice” exemption is necessary because Congress decided to cover activities that aim “directly or indirectly” to persuade employees. 29 U.S.C. § 433(b) (emphasis added); see, e.g., 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,925-26 (“This rule ensures that indirect reporter [sic] activity, as intended by Congress, is reported and disclosed . . .”). Indeed, the agency relies on this argument in the very first sentence of the Rule: “The purpose of this rule is to revise the Department’s interpretation of section 203 . . . to require reporting of ‘indirect’ persuader activities and agreements.” 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,925. The central premise of this argument is that, under DOL’s prior interpretation, the advice exemption swallowed the statute’s express coverage of “indirect[]” persuasion.

But that premise is wrong; DOL's new interpretation is not necessary to give meaning to the LMRDA's coverage of "indirect" persuasion. The prior rule embraced by five decades of the current DOL staff's predecessors—across administrations of both parties—did not read "indirect" persuasion out of the statute, or in any way render it a nullity. The prior interpretation simply understood the term differently—and far more plausibly—than DOL now suggests.

In ordinary usage, "direct" persuasion involves open, frank communication addressed to the question at issue, and "indirect" persuasion involves subtler or more oblique efforts to change a person's mind. If a piece of persuasive writing (such as a brief) is described as "direct," for example, that means that it is forthright and speaks squarely to the issue at hand. By contrast, if it is characterized as "indirect," that means it gets at the point more subtly or obliquely. Both are efforts to persuade the audience, but one style pursues this directly, and the other does so indirectly. For instance, if a person directly suggests that an employee not join a union, he is engaging in direct persuasion. If that person offers factual information about the history of unions that portrays unions negatively, or mentions that an admired family member did not unionize, but offers no specific opinion on whether to join a union, he is engaging in indirect persuasion.

The phrase "indirectly persuade" is routinely used in precisely this way. See, e.g., Davis v. Halpern, 768 F. Supp. 968, 985 (E.D.N.Y. 1991) (explaining that, under Title VII, a "plaintiff may indirectly persuade the court of pretext by showing that the employer's proffered explanation is not worthy of credence"); Brian Cogan & Tony Kelso, Encyclopedia of Politics, the Media, and Popular Culture 281 (2009) (describing a “denunciation of the George W. Bush administration that was designed to indirectly persuade the population to vote for [D]emocratic challenger Senator John Kerry”). To take another example, there is a substantial literature on the relative virtues of “direct” and “indirect” persuasion in advertising, where those terms are used in this same way.¹ Both forms of advertising are “direct” in the sense that they are directed at the consumer, with no intermediary; they simply differ in the way they go about persuading him or her of the virtues of a product.

As DOL’s prior rule recognized, Congress sought to cover both of these forms of persuasion. That is, a persuader who resorts to indirection in communicating with employees, like a persuader who squarely urges a view about unionization, is subject to the statute’s requirements. The “directly or indirectly” language thus precludes quibbling over whether the persuader was really trying to change an employee’s mind on the ultimate question of unionization, rather than simply to inform the employee of certain relevant facts, to influence the employee’s overall worldview, or the like.

This understanding of “indirect” persuasion squares with the ordinary meaning of the statutory language, and it readily explains why the “advice” exemption, as previously construed, in no way swallows the reporting rule. But DOL did not fairly consider this longstanding and straightforward interpretation of the statute. Instead, it caricatured the old rule as simply omitting “indirect” persuasion altogether (which it did not), and launched an extended attack on that straw man in an attempt to justify its radical new understanding of the word “advice.” Accordingly, the agency’s new interpretation is an implausible solution in search of a nonexistent problem.

¹ See, e.g., Edward F. McQuarrie & Barbara J. Phillips, Indirect Persuasion in Advertising: How Consumers Process Metaphors Presented in Pictures and Words, 34 J. Advertising 7 (2005); Youjae Yi, Direct and Indirect Approaches to Advertising Persuasion: Which Is More Effective?, 20 J. Bus. Res. 279 (1990).

B. Well-Established Canons of Construction Confirm That Congress Clearly Did Not Intend DOL’s New Interpretation.

The Chevron analysis requires the Court to look not only to the plain text of the statute, but also to the various other tools that courts customarily employ to discern a law’s meaning. See, e.g., INS v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 449 (1987) (relying on the “ordinary canons of statutory construction” to discern whether the statute unambiguously forecloses the agency’s reading).

In this case, three tools of statutory construction—respect for statutory context, constitutional avoidance, and the rule of lenity—confirm that Congress intended to exempt all advice offered to employers from the statute’s reporting obligation. Accordingly, DOL’s interpretation is entitled to no deference, and the Rule cannot stand.

1. Context Precludes DOL’s New Interpretation.

“It is a fundamental canon of statutory construction that the words of a statute must be read in their context and with a view to their place in the overall statutory scheme.” FDA v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 133 (2000) (quotation marks omitted). In this case, the scheme is perfectly clear. Congress exempted “advice” from the reporting obligations in order to exempt legal advice, as well as that of non-lawyer consultants, about how to persuade employees on union issues. Congress had legal advice squarely in mind when it exempted “advice”: other activities exempted in the very same statutory sentence were “representing or agreeing to represent such employer before any court, administrative agency, or tribunal of arbitration or engaging or agreeing to engage in collective bargaining on behalf of such employer,” which are the typical work of lawyers. 29 U.S.C. § 433(c). And Congress’s intent to cover non-lawyer consultants is clear from Congress’s use of the phrase “advice” rather than “legal advice”—a point confirmed by the legislative history. See S. Rep. No. 85-1684, at 8-9 (1958) (stating that statute covers the activities of “attorneys at law and other responsible labor-relations advisers”) (emphasis added).

Thus, in context, the question before the Court is this: would the ordinary understanding of “legal advice” encompass efforts to assist a client in persuading a third party? The answer is obviously yes. Lawyers routinely assist their clients in persuading third parties. They advise companies poised to go public by drafting a prospectus; they help individuals and advocacy groups persuade legislators by drafting testimony; and so forth. All of this material is plainly encompassed in the ordinary meaning of “legal advice.” See, e.g., Int’l Union, 869 F.2d at 619 n.4 (R.B. Ginsburg, J.) (“the term ‘advice,’ in lawyers’ parlance, may encompass, e.g., the preparation of a client’s answers to interrogatories, the scripting of a closing or an annual meeting” (citation omitted)). Yet DOL’s new interpretation holds that none of this material is “advice”—apparently because the ultimate purpose of that material is to persuade someone of something. In light of Congress’s evident purpose to exempt legal advice from the statute’s coverage, that interpretation is untenable.

The same logic extends to consultants. The word “consult”—a synonym of “advise”—is ordinarily understood to encompass activities whose ultimate purpose is persuasion. A consultant might be retained to help prepare an effective presentation, for example, or to advise a company about the efficacy of different persuasive tactics. Indeed, such engagements were one of the paradigms for which the advice exemption was devised. So it makes no sense to suppose that Congress meant to exclude these consulting arrangements from that same exemption merely because their purpose is to persuade employees not to unionize. Rather, Congress unambiguously intended to exempt all such communications from the LMRDA’s reporting requirements.

DOL’s new interpretation also conflicts with the plain terms and context of the LMRDA in another respect. The statute specifically states that the reporting obligation is not triggered by a consultant’s “engaging or agreeing to engage in collective bargaining on behalf of [an] employer . . . or the negotiation of an agreement or any question arising thereunder.” 29 U.S.C. § 433(c). The process of collective bargaining necessarily includes communications and conduct at the bargaining table, as well as those that occur before and after the bargaining session. See generally Procter & Gamble Mfg. Co., 160 NLRB 334, 340-341 (1966). Indeed, as the Second Circuit aptly observed:

Labor negotiations do not occur in a vacuum. While the actual bargaining is between employer and union, the employees are naturally interested parties. During a labor dispute the employees are like voters whom both sides seek to persuade. . . . [U]nions are granted extensive powers to communicate with employees in the represented unit. Consistent with the First Amendment, the employer must also be afforded an opportunity to communicate its positions.

NLRB v. Pratt & Whitney Air Craft Div., 789 F.2d 121, 134 (2d Cir. 1986) (citations omitted).

Although DOL's rule does not require reporting regarding persuader activities undertaken in formal collective bargaining sessions, it does require consultants to report communications "drafted by the consultant" for potential use by an employer "about the parties' progress in negotiations, arguing the union's proposals are unacceptable to the employer, encouraging employees to participate in a union ratification vote or support the union committee's recommendations, or concerning the possible ramifications of striking." 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,971; see id. at 15,939 ("While many reports will be triggered by persuader activities related to the filing of representation petitions, others will result from activities related to collective bargaining. . . ." (emphasis added)).

Thus, no reporting is required for activities where a lawyer sits at the bargaining table, argues that the employer's proposals are fair and reasonable, and informs the union bargaining team that if they strike, the employer has the right to replace them on a temporary or permanent basis. But if the very same lawyer recommends to his client that they make those very same points to employees who were not at the bargaining table, or assists the employer in drafting any such communications, DOL's new rule transforms that work into reportable "persuader activities." That outcome finds no support in the text of the statute.

2. Constitutional Avoidance Precludes DOL's New Interpretation.

The canon of constitutional avoidance is “a tool for choosing between competing plausible interpretations of a statutory text, resting on the reasonable presumption that Congress did not intend the alternative which raises serious constitutional doubts.” Clark v. Martinez, 543 U.S. 371, 381 (2005). This indicator of Congress’s intent is central to the determination whether Congress unambiguously resolved a question under Chevron. See, e.g., Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Fla. Gulf Coast Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 574-75 (1988) (explaining that, under Chevron, “where an otherwise acceptable construction of a statute would raise serious constitutional problems, the Court will construe the statute to avoid such problems unless such construction is plainly contrary to the intent of Congress” (citations omitted)).

Even if DOL’s new interpretation were textually permissible (and it is not), the constitutional doubts it raises would nonetheless preclude it. DOL does not—nor could it—deny that the prior interpretation, which it applied for fifty years, is a permissible reading of the statute. And the new reading clearly raises formidable constitutional difficulties that the prior reading did not. The canon of constitutional avoidance compels the conclusion that Congress intended the old rule.

First, DOL’s new interpretation undermines the First Amendment justification for the statute’s disclosure requirement. Because disclosure requirements impose a significant burden on constitutionally protected speech, they are, at a minimum, subject to “‘exacting scrutiny,’” which requires a “‘substantial relation’ between the disclosure requirement and a ‘sufficiently important’ governmental interest.” Citizens United v.

FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 366-67 (2010) (quoting Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 64, 66 (1976)). Specifically, in the election context, disclosure requirements are upheld only if they serve to ferret out misleading activities, such as the pernicious practice of running election-related advertisements ““while hiding behind dubious and misleading names,”” which misleads voters and impairs the integrity of the marketplace of ideas. McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93, 197 (2003).

That is very similar to the interest traditionally served by the LMRDA’s disclosure requirements. As previously understood, those disclosure requirements ensure that, where employees receive anti-union messages from someone who cannot readily be identified as the employer’s agent, they know if their employer is really behind those messages. That purpose reflects the “prime congressional concern to uncover employer-expenditures for anti-union persuasion carried out, often surreptitiously, not by employers or supervisors, but by consultants or middlemen.” Int’l Union, 869 F.2d at 619 n.5; see Pls. Br. at 2-4 (detailing legislative history). Indeed, the Senate Report on the legislation specifically observed that “public disclosure” of covered activities “will accomplish the same purpose as public disclosure of conflicts of interest.” S. Rep. No. 86-187, at 12 (1959). This has served as the basis for decisions upholding the constitutionality of the LMRDA’s reporting requirements under DOL’s prior interpretation. See, e.g., Humphreys, Hutcheson & Moseley v. Donovan, 755 F.2d 1211, 1222 (6th Cir. 1985); Master Printers of Am. v. Donovan, 751 F.2d 700, 707-08 (4th Cir. 1984).

DOL’s new, narrow interpretation of the advice exemption, however, unmoors the LMRDA’s reporting provision from this familiar interest. Informing employees that an employer has obtained advice from particular attorneys or consultants to help the employer be more persuasive does not help the employees to better understand the speaker's—that is, the employer's—incentives. Nor does it serve to identify the real party in interest behind a communication (which is still the employer). The employer's incentives are the same whether or not it has obtained outside input, and the real party in interest is plainly the employer, not the consultant, regardless.

DOL candidly acknowledges these distinctions from the disclosure interests previously credited by the courts, 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,985-86, which cannot support its new interpretation. Accordingly, the agency spins out a new theory: disclosure of consulting arrangements, it argues, provides “pertinent information” because it allows employees to put the employer’s message “into the proper context.” Id. at 15,986. It is highly dubious that this novel and sweeping interest would pass constitutional muster. See, e.g., McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Comm’n, 514 U.S. 334, 348 (1995) (“The simple interest in providing voters with additional relevant information does not justify a state requirement that a writer make statements or disclosures she would otherwise omit.”). But, at a minimum, DOL’s new theory raises grave constitutional questions that the traditional interpretation entirely avoids. Assuming that both interpretations are plausible readings of the statutory text, therefore, the constitutional avoidance canon dictates that the prior interpretation must be preferred.

Second, DOL’s new interpretation construes the statute as imposing a content-based distinction, whereas the old interpretation did not. Under the prior rule, the statute’s applicability turned on the speaker’s audience. If a consultant addressed only the employer, disclosure was not required; if the same consultant addressed employees themselves, it was. See 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,925 (explaining that the prior rule “shield[ed] employers and their consultants from reporting agreements in which the consultant has no face-to-face contact with employees”). By contrast, under the new rule, the statute’s application for the first time turns on what the speaker says to the employer.

This new regime implicates the First Amendment principle that the government may not engage in content discrimination, which inevitably skews the marketplace of ideas. DOL failed to appreciate the significance of this point because it focused only on the extent of the burden imposed by disclosure requirements. See 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,984. The costs of disclosure, the agency insists, are not so heavy that speakers will be deterred from exercising their rights. See id. But whatever the merits of this response, it entirely ignores an important aspect of the problem. The First Amendment strongly disfavors selective government interventions into the marketplace of ideas whether or not speech is being completely deterred. “The first danger to liberty lies in granting the State the power to examine publications to determine whether or not they are based on some ultimate idea and, if so, for the State to classify them.” Rosenberger v. Rector & Visitors of Univ. of Va., 515 U.S. 819, 835 (1995). Even if all the government proceeds to do is subsidize or facilitate the speech that it classifies favorably, that interference with the free market is presumptively impermissible. Id. at 834; Good News Club v. Milford Cent. Sch., 533 U.S. 98, 110 (2001); see also Williams-Yulee v. Florida Bar, 135 S. Ct. 1656, 1680 (2015) (Scalia, J., dissenting) (“Among its other functions, the First Amendment is a kind of Equal Protection Clause for ideas.”).

DOL's new interpretation exposes the LMRDA to serious First Amendment doubts because, whether or not anyone is ultimately deterred from speaking, it marks a new intervention by the federal government into the marketplace of ideas. The examples set forth in the Rule make this clear. "For example, reporting is required if the consultant determines that a monthly bonus to employees should be the equivalent of one month's dues payments of the union involved in an election." 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,973. But if the consultant simply offers different advice—such as offering "guidance on employer personnel policies and best practices" without touching on the union, id. at 15,928—no reporting obligation applies. This imposition of regulatory consequences based on the content of speech raises serious constitutional concerns—and that is putting it mildly. Indeed, both Congress and the Supreme Court have stressed the special importance of "encourag[ing] free debate on issues dividing labor and management" in the workplace. Chamber of Commerce of U.S. v. Brown, 554 U.S. 60, 67 (2008) (quotation marks omitted). The LMRDA should not be read to enact a system of selective, content-based speech regulations in this delicate area unless no alternative interpretation is available. Here, of course, the prior rule offers an alternative account of the statute—and indeed a more plausible one—that is free of this new form of constitutional doubt.

Third, DOL's new interpretation of the statute also threatens to render it unconstitutionally vague. The Due Process Clause proscribes any law that is "so standardless that it invites arbitrary enforcement," Johnson v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2551, 2556 (2015), or that fails to give fair notice of what is prohibited, such that "men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application,” Connally v. General Construction Co., 269 U.S. 385, 391 (1926). As the Supreme Court has emphasized, these principles apply with particular force in the First Amendment context because vague regulations inevitably deter even unregulated speech. See FCC v. Fox Television Stations, Inc., 132 S. Ct. 2307, 2317 (2012) (“When speech is involved, rigorous adherence to those requirements is necessary to ensure that ambiguity does not chill protected speech.”).

Here, at a minimum, DOL’s new interpretation unnecessarily steers the statute perilously close to “a vagueness shoal.” Skilling v. United States, 561 U.S. 358, 368 (2010). Under the prior rule, “advice” bore its ordinary meaning—and so long as consultants or attorneys were engaged in advising an employer, they could be confident they were not also involved in covered persuasion. Now, however, whether an activity constitutes “advice” will depend on the “object” or motive that a court may later impute to the consultant’s speech—taking account of “the agreement, any accompanying communication, the timing, or other circumstances relevant to the undertaking.” 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,928. Attorneys and consultants will understandably balk at the prospect of having their speech parsed under this totality-of-the-circumstances test and will be forced to stay well clear of the line—chilling more protected speech than even DOL identifies in the Rule. Moreover, the Rule gives obscure and inconsistent instructions that will necessarily leave “men of common intelligence” to “guess at its meaning” in a given case. Connally, 269 U.S. at 391. For example, a consultant need not report if he merely provides the employer with a selection of “off-the-shelf” materials from which the employer may choose. 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,938. But if the consultant “plays an active role in selecting the materials,” the reporting obligation applies. Id. It is entirely unclear what constitutes an “active role,” or how large a menu of choices the consultant must provide the employer to avoid being accused of guiding the employer’s selection. Likewise, a consultant may advise an employer regarding personnel policies, such as developing a grievance process. Id. at 15,939. But the very same action becomes reportable if an enforcement agency might infer from “the circumstances” that the policy had a purpose, at least in part, of obviating the need for union representation. Id.

By replacing a clear and determinate reporting rule with an ambiguous one, DOL’s new interpretation once again exposes the statute to new, serious, and unnecessary constitutional doubts. It should be strongly disfavored on that basis.

3. The Rule of Lenity Precludes DOL’s New Interpretation.

Violations of the reporting requirements in 29 U.S.C. § 433 are misdemeanor offenses, subject to criminal penalties of up to one year in jail and as much as a $10,000 fine, 29 U.S.C. § 439. Accordingly, any ambiguity in the scope of § 433 must “be resolved in favor of lenity.” United States v. Bass, 404 U.S. 336, 347 (1971) (quotation marks omitted). The rule of lenity requires that “when choice has to be made between two readings of what conduct Congress has made a crime, it is appropriate, before we choose the harsher alternative, to require that Congress should have spoken in language that is clear and definite.” United States v. Universal C. I. T. Credit Corp., 344 U.S. 218, 221-22 (1952); see id. at 222 (“We should not derive criminal outlawry from some ambiguous implication.”).

At a minimum, it is plausible to read the advice exemption as DOL did for the past fifty-plus years, see Int'l Union, 869 F.2d at 620; 81 Fed. Reg. at 15,941, and that reading avoids concerns about the scope and vagueness of the criminal penalties under this statute. It follows that, in a criminal case, any ambiguity would be resolved in favor of the criminal defendant, and the old rule would govern. In effect, Chevron deference would be ousted by the rule of lenity, which ensures that “federal administrators can[not] in effect create (and uncreate) new crimes at will, so long as they do not roam beyond ambiguities that the laws contain.” Whitman v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 352, 353 (2014) (Scalia, J., respecting the denial of certiorari).

Because the same statutory language cannot have two meanings, that more lenient interpretation must be applied in the civil context as well. As the Court has explained, “[t]he lowest common denominator, as it were, must govern.” Clark, 543 U.S. at 380; see id. (explaining that “if a statute has criminal applications, ‘the rule of lenity applies’ to the Court’s interpretation of the statute even in immigration cases ‘[b]ecause we must interpret the statute consistently, whether we encounter its application in a criminal or noncriminal context’” (quoting Leocal v. Ashcroft, 543 U.S. 1, 11-12 n.8 (2004))). LMRDA’s operative language therefore must be construed in light of the rule of lenity before asking whether the statute, so interpreted, leaves a genuine gap for the agency to fill. See Esquivel-Quintana v. Lynch, 810 F.3d 1019, 1028 (6th Cir. 2016) (Sutton, J., concurring) (“[t]he courts must give dual-application statutes just one interpretation, and the criminal application controls”). And here lenity plainly favors DOL’s prior rule, which affixed no penalty to unreported communications between consultants and employers. For this reason, too, traditional rules of statutory interpretation confirm that DOL's approach fails under Chevron.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Chamber respectfully contends the Court should grant the Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction.

Dated: April 27, 2016

Adam G. Unikowsky*
JENNER & BLOCK LLP
1099 New York Ave, NW
Washington, DC 20001
(202) 639-6041

Kate Comerford Todd*
Steven P. Lehotsky*
Warren Postman*
U.S. CHAMBER LITIGATION CENTER
1615 H Street, NW
Washington, DC 20062
(202) 463-5337

Pro Hac Vice* application pending

Respectfully submitted,

Aaron D. Van Oort (MN No. 315539)
Nicholas J. Nelson (MN No. 391984)
FAEGRE BAKER DANIELS LLP
2200 Wells Fargo Center
90 S. Seventh Street
Minneapolis, MN 55402
(612) 766-7000

Stuart R. Buttrick*
FAEGRE BAKER DANIELS LLP
300 N. Meridian Street, Suite 2700
Indianapolis, IN 46204
(317) 237-1038

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on April 27, 2016, I filed this document with the Clerk of Court through the Court's CM/ECF system, which will serve a true and correct copy of the foregoing by electronic notification to all other parties through their counsel of record.

/s/ Aaron D. Van Oort