

No. 18-5007

---

In the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

LEANDRA ENGLISH,
Plaintiff-Appellant,

v.

DONALD J. TRUMP, ET AL,
Defendants-Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, Case No. 1:17-cv-2534-TJK

BRIEF FOR THE STATES OF TEXAS, WEST VIRGINIA, ALABAMA, ARIZONA, ARKANSAS, FLORIDA, GEORGIA,
KANSAS, LOUISIANA, MICHIGAN, NEBRASKA,
OKLAHOMA, AND SOUTH CAROLINA AS AMICI CURIAE
IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANTS-APPELLEES

PATRICK MORRISEY
Attorney General of West Virginia

ERICA N. PETERSON
Assistant Attorney General

Office of the West Virginia
Attorney General
State Capitol Complex
Building 1, Room 26-E
Charleston, WV 25305
(304) 558-2021

KEN PAXTON
Attorney General of Texas

JEFFERY C. MATEER
First Assistant Attorney General

SCOTT A. KELLER
Solicitor General

KYLE D. HAWKINS
Assistant Solicitor General
Office of the Texas Attorney General
P.O. Box 12548, Mail Code 059
Austin, Texas 78711-2548
scott.keller@oag.texas.gov
(512) 936-1700

Attorneys for Amici Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Index of Authorities .....	iii
Interest of Amici Curiae.....	1
Introduction .....	3
Argument.....	5
I.    The Dodd-Frank Act Cannot Override the President’s Prerogative to Appoint Officers Under the Federal Vacancies Reform Act to Wield Executive Power. ....	5
A.    Article II Requires That the President Retain the Power to Nominate and Appoint Principal Officers. ....	5
B.    The CFPB Director Wields Power Commensurate with a Principal Officer of the United States. ....	8
C.    English’s Proposed Statutory Interpretation Raises Grave Constitutional Concerns Courts Should Avoid.....	12
II.   The Federal Vacancies Reform Act Forecloses English’s Claims.....	16
Conclusion .....	17
Certificate of Service.....	19
Certificate of Compliance .....	19

INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

	Page(s)
Cases:
Allied-Bruce Terminix Co. v. Dobson , 513 U.S. 265 (1995) .....	10
Am. Express Co. v. Italian Colors Rest. , 570 U.S. 228 (2013) .....	10
Crowell v. Benson , 285 U.S. 22 (1932) .....	4, 13
Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Byrd , 470 U.S. 213 (1985) .....	10
Edmond v. United States , 520 U.S. 651 (1997) .....	8
English v. Trump , No. 17-2534, 2018 WL 358777 (D.D.C. Jan. 10, 2018) .....	14, 15
Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd. , 561 U.S. 477 (2010) .....	3, 6, 8, 13, 14, 16
Janko v. Gates , 741 F.3d 136 (D.C. Cir. 2014) .....	4, 13
Marmet Health Care Ctr., Inc. v. Brown , 565 U.S. 530 (2012) (per curiam) .....	10
Massachusetts v. EPA , 549 U.S. 497 (2007) .....	1
Morrison v. Olson , 487 U.S. 654 (1988) .....	7, 8, 9, 11, 12
Myers v. United States , 272 U.S. 52 (1926) .....	3, 6

PHH Corp. v. Consumer Fin. Prot. Bureau , 881 F.3d 75 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (en banc) .....	1, 4, 9, 11, 12, 15
Printz v. United States , 521 U.S. 898 (1997) .....	5
Rice v. Ames , 180 U.S. 371 (1901) .....	7
Rust v. Sullivan , 500 U.S. 173 (1991) .....	4, 12
Ex parte Siebold , 100 U.S. ....	7
Texas v. United States , 809 F.3d 134 (5th Cir. 2015), aff'd by equally divided Court , 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (per curiam).....	1
United States v. Eaton , 169 U.S. 331 (1898) .....	7
United States v. Germaine , 99 U.S. (9 Otto) 508 (1878).....	7

Constitutional Provisions and Statutes

U.S. Const. art. II

§ 1, cl. 1 .....	3
§ 2, cl. 2 .....	3, 6, 7
§ 3 .....	3

12 U.S.C.

§ 5491.....	9
§ 5511(a).....	9
§ 5512.....	9, 11
§ 5514(b) .....	9, 11
§ 5515(b) .....	9, 11
§ 5516.....	9, 11
§§ 5562-5564.....	9, 11
§ 5562(c).....	9, 11

§ 5563(a) .....	9, 11
§ 5564(f).....	9, 11
§ 5581(b) .....	12

Other Authorities

1 Annals of Cong. 463 (1789) (Joseph Gales ed., 1834) .....	6
2 Joseph Story, Commentaries on the Constitution § 1536, 397 (3d ed. 1858) .....	7
3 Joseph Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States § 1414, 283 (1833).....	6
Akhil Reed Amar, AMERICA’S CONSTITUTION: A BIOGRAPHY 197 (2005) .....	5
“Arbitration Agreements,” 82 Fed. Reg. 33210 (July 19, 2017).....	9, 10
H.R.J. Res. 111, 115th Cong. (2017) (signed by President Nov. 1, 2017).....	10
Kent Barnett, The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau’s Appointment with Trouble , 60 AM. U. L. REV. 1459 (2011) .....	13
Neomi Rao, Removal: Necessary and Sufficient for Presidential Control , 65 ALA. L. REV. 1205 (2014).....	6
President Donald J. Trump Signs H.J. Res. 111 into Law (Nov. 1, 2017), at https://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2017/11/01/president-donald-j-trump-signs-hjres-111-law .....	10
U.S. Dep’t of the Treasury, Limiting Consumer Choice, Expanding Costly Litigation: An Analysis of the CFPB Arbitration Rule 1 (Oct. 23, 2017), https://www.treasury.gov/press-center/press-releases/Documents/10-23-17%20Analysis%20of%20CFPB%20arbitration%20rule.pdf .....	10–11

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

Amici are the States of Texas, West Virginia, Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Nebraska, Oklahoma, and South Carolina.<sup>1</sup> States have “special solicitude” to challenge unlawful federal Executive Branch actions. Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 520 (2007). Courts have long recognized that the States guard “the public interest in protecting separation of powers by curtailing unlawful executive action.” Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 187 (5th Cir. 2015), aff’d by equally divided Court, 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (per curiam).

Those interests lie at the heart of this case: the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau wields sweeping power over the actions of millions of Americans. The CFPB’s “Director is unique among the principal officers of independent agencies in that he exercises vast executive power unilaterally: as a board of one, he need not deliberate with anyone before acting.” PHH Corp. v. Consumer Fin. Prot. Bureau, 881 F.3d 75, 138 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (en banc) (Henderson, J., dissenting).

Any federal official who wields that level of power should be selected by the President—not by an unaccountable federal bureaucrat. Amici fully expect that the President will quickly nominate the next permanent Director of the CFPB, and that the Senate will act expeditiously to fulfill its role of advising and consenting in the appointment of that individual. In the meantime, the President's choice for Acting Director pursuant to the Federal Vacancies Reform Act must be honored. Plaintiff-Appellant's contrary argument that the Dodd-Frank Act of 2010 supplants the President's choice raises serious constitutional concerns and undermines the Constitution's separation of powers.

---

<sup>1</sup> Neither amici nor counsel received any monetary contributions intended to fund preparing or submitting this brief. No party’s counsel authored this brief in whole or in part.

Amici thus urge the Court to affirm the district court's judgment.

INTRODUCTION

The Constitution vests “[t]he executive Power” in the President and compels him to “take care that the laws be faithfully executed.” U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 1; id. art. II, § 3. But the “President cannot ‘take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed’ if he cannot oversee the faithfulness of the officers who execute them.” Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 484 (2010). That is why the Constitution grants the President, “as part of his executive power,” the power to “select those who [are] to act for him under his direction in the execution of the laws.” Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 117 (1926). It provides that the President “shall have [the] Power,” with the Senate’s advice and consent, to nominate and appoint “all other Officers of the United States.” U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

In this lawsuit, Plaintiff-Appellant Leandra English asks the Court to blend the powers the Constitution proclaims separate. She seeks a declaration that Congress has overridden the President’s decision as to who should wield the extraordinary executive powers vested in the CFPB—instead of a recognition that the Federal Vacancies Reform Act provides an alternative statutory means by which the President can make temporary appointments such as the appointment at issue here. According to English, the Dodd-Frank Act of 2010, which created the CFPB, overrides the Federal Vacancies Reform Act and gives the President no say in that decision. But the CFPB’s Director “enjoys more unilateral authority than any other official in any of the three branches of the U.S. Government,” other than the President. PHH Corp., 881 F.3d at 166 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

If English is correct, then the Dodd-Frank Act raises “grave and doubtful constitutional questions,” Rust v. Sullivan, 500 U.S. 173, 191 (1991) (citation omitted), by impinging on the President’s ability to carry out the executive power. This Court has held repeatedly that “[w]hen the validity of an act of the Congress is drawn in question, and even if a serious doubt of constitutionality is raised, it is a cardinal principle that this Court will first ascertain whether a construction of the statute is fairly possible by which the question may be avoided.” Janko v. Gates, 741 F.3d 136, 145 n.9 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (quoting Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 62 (1932)). The Court should follow that constitutional-avoidance doctrine here and decline to construe the Dodd-Frank Act as overriding the President’s choice of Acting Director. The proper course, as Defendants-Appellees President Trump and Mick Mulvaney argue, is to hold that under the Federal Vacancies Reform Act, the President’s decision to appoint the CFPB’s Acting Director controls and supplants the competing framework set out in the Dodd-Frank Act. The Court should therefore affirm the judgment of the district court.

ARGUMENT

I. The Dodd-Frank Act Cannot Override the President’s Prerogative to Appoint Officers Under the Federal Vacancies Reform Act to Wield Executive Power.

The Constitution’s separation of powers gives the President authority to decide who will wield the CFPB’s extraordinary executive power. English’s interpretation of the Dodd-Frank Act thus raises a constitutional question of whether Congress can supplant that authority and give an unelected federal bureaucrat the sole, unchecked power to bestow extraordinary executive power on another individual without regard to the President’s views. The Court should avoid that constitutional quagmire by holding that the President has the power to select the CFPB’s Acting Director.

A. Article II Requires That the President Retain the Power to Nominate and Appoint Principal Officers.

1. Article II bestows “[t]he executive Power” in a single, unitary executive. It makes “emphatically clear from start to finish” that “the president would be personally responsible for his branch.”<sup>2</sup> Akhil Reed Amar, AMERICA’S CONSTITUTION: A BIOGRAPHY 197 (2005). The Framers demanded “unity in the Federal Executive” to guarantee “both vigor and accountability.” Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 922 (1997). This unitary executive further promotes “[d]ecision, activity, secrecy, and d[i]spatch” in ways that a “greater number” cannot. 3 Joseph Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States § 1414, at 283 (1833).

---

<sup>2</sup> State Constitutions, of course, may establish a different structure.

Among those executive powers is the power to nominate and appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, “Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States[.]” U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2. The power to appoint “Officers of the United States” empowers the President, “as part of his executive power,” to “select those who [are] to act for him under his direction in the execution of the laws.” Myers, 272 U.S. at 117. Selecting assistants and deputies lies at the heart of “the executive power,” which necessarily includes “the power of appointing, overseeing, and controlling those who execute the laws.” Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 492 (quoting 1 Annals of Cong. 463 (1789) (Joseph Gales ed., 1834) (remarks of Madison)).

The appointment power ensures the proper functioning of the chain of command under which the Executive Branch functions. See Neomi Rao, Removal: Necessary and Sufficient for Presidential Control, 65 ALA. L. REV. 1205, 1215 (2014) (“The text and structure of Article II provide the President with the power to control subordinates within the executive branch.”). As the Supreme Court has recognized, Congress intolerably impinges on the President’s power to faithfully execute the law when it deprives the President of the power to “oversee the faithfulness of the officers who execute them.” See Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 484.

2. To be sure, the Constitution does not require the President to appoint every actor in the Executive Branch. Instead, it authorizes Congress to “vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.” U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2. Thus, for purposes of appointments, the Constitution “divides all its officers into two classes.” Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 670 (1988) (quoting United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. (9 Otto) 508, 509 (1878)). Congress may vest the appointment of so-called “inferior” officers outside the Executive Branch if it chooses, but “principal” officers must be nominated and appointed only by the President. Id.

The Supreme Court has acknowledged that the “line between ‘inferior’ and ‘principal’ officers is one that is far from clear, and the Framers provided little guidance into where it should be drawn.” Id. at 671 (citing 2 Joseph Story, Commentaries on the Constitution § 1536, at. 397–98 (3d ed. 1858)). The Supreme Court has rarely categorized government officials, though it has clarified that election supervisors are inferior officers. Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. (10 Otto) 371, 397–98 (1879). So, too, are vice consuls, United States v. Eaton, 169 U.S. 331, 343 (1898), and extradition commissioners, Rice v. Ames, 180 U.S. 371, 378 (1901).

The Morrison Court listed several factors relevant to the inquiry. The first is whether the official is “subject to removal by a higher Executive Branch official.” 487 U.S. at 671. Next is whether the official may perform “only certain, limited duties.” Id. Third is whether the official’s “office is limited in jurisdiction.” Id. at 672. Fourth, and finally, is whether the official’s “office is limited in tenure.” Id. None is dispositive. See id.

Most recently, the Supreme Court declared in Free Enterprise Fund that the five members of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board are inferior officers who may be appointed by the Securities and Exchange Commission. 561 U.S. at 510. Relying on Edmond v. United States, 520 U.S. 651, 662–63 (1997), the Court held that inferior officers are “‘directed and supervised at some level’ by other officers appointed by the President with the Senate’s consent.” 561 U.S. at 510 (quoting 520 U.S. at 663). Because the SEC had the power to remove PCAOB members, those members were inferior officers whose appointments could be vested in the “Hea[d] of Departmen[t].” Id.

The Supreme Court has provided little additional guidance. While the above cases confirm that there is no bright-line rule for when Congress may place a particular office outside the President’s appointment power, the Constitution’s separation-of-powers structure remains the touchstone. See Morrison, 487 U.S. at 693–94 (“Time and again we have reaffirmed the importance in our constitutional scheme of the separation of governmental powers into the three coordinate branches.”).

B. The CFPB Director Wields Power Commensurate with a Principal Officer of the United States.

1.a. While no court has confronted this issue directly, the CFPB Director—and by extension, the Acting Director—wields vast powers commensurate with a principal officer of the United States.

The CFPB is headed by a single Director. 12 U.S.C. § 5491(b). He serves a term of five years and may be fired only for “inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office.” Id. § 5491(c). And he wields quintessentially executive power because he is appointed to “enforce Federal consumer financial law.” PHH Corp., 881 F.3d at 81 (quoting 12 U.S.C. § 5511(a)). He can even bring criminal enforcement actions (see id. at 111-12 (Tatel, J., concurring)), which was “quintessentially ‘executive’ in nature.” Id. at 102 (citing Morrison, 487 U.S. at 691).

The Director wields that executive power as to multiple federal consumer-protection statutes. See 12 U.S.C. § 5512(b)(1). He may examine and investigate individuals and entities to assess their compliance with those statutes. Id. §§ 5514(b), 5515(b), 5516. He may issue “civil investigative demand[s].” Id. § 5562(c). He may institute enforcement actions and conduct “adjudication proceedings.” Id. § 5563(a). He may sue in state or federal court to enforce consumer-protection laws. Id. § 5564(f).

b. The CFPB’s Arbitration Rule—which Congress and the President recently rescinded—demonstrates the far-reaching powers of the CFPB’s Director. See “Arbitration Agreements,” 82 Fed. Reg. 33210 (July 19, 2017). Until its repeal, the Arbitration Rule restricted the ability of some businesses to compel arbitration in lieu of class-action litigation. Id. Among other things, it “prohibit[ed] covered providers of certain consumer financial products and services from using an agreement with a consumer that provides for arbitration of any future dispute between the parties to bar the consumer from filing or participating in a class action concerning the covered consumer financial product or service.” Id. It took effect in September 2017 but was repealed on November 1, 2017. See H.R.J. Res. 111, 115th Cong. (2017) (signed by President Nov. 1, 2017); President Donald J. Trump Signs H.J. Res. 111 into Law (Nov. 1, 2017), at <https://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2017/11/01/president-donald-j-trump-signs-hjres-111-law>.

The Arbitration Rule seriously (and, as it turned out, temporarily) undermined the strong and longstanding national policy favoring arbitration. The Federal Arbitration Act enshrines an “emphatic federal policy in favor of arbitral dispute resolution.” Marmet Health Care Ctr., Inc. v. Brown, 565 U.S. 530, 533 (2012) (per curiam) (quotations omitted). It provides that arbitration agreements must be “rigorously enforce[d].” Am. Express Co. v. Italian Colors Rest., 570 U.S. 228, 233 (2013) (quoting Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Byrd, 470 U.S. 213, 221 (1985)). That pro-arbitration policy protects businesses and consumers alike. See Allied-Bruce Terminix Co. v. Dobson, 513 U.S. 265, 280 (1995) (“The advantages of arbitration [for consumers] are many.”).

The CFPB’s Arbitration Rule sought to supplant all those sound policies. Rather than advance the strong federal policy favoring arbitration, the CFPB effectively reversed it. Indeed, the U.S. Department of Treasury recently issued a report projecting that the Arbitration Rule, had it not been rescinded, would have “impose[d] extraordinary costs” on businesses with very little (if any) benefit to consumers. U.S. Dep’t of the Treasury, Limiting Consumer Choice, Expanding Costly Litigation: An Analysis of the CFPB Arbitration Rule 1

(Oct. 23, 2017), <https://www.treasury.gov/press-center/press-releases/Documents/10-23-17%20Analysis%20of%20CFPB%20arbitration%20rule.pdf>.

2. Analyzed under the Morrison and Free Enterprise Fund framework, the powers that the CFPB's Acting Director will wield are on par with that of a principal officer who can be nominated and appointed only by the President.

In particular, the CFPB Director—and, by extension, the Acting Director—wield significant powers, not the “certain, limited duties” the Supreme Court has tied to inferior officers. See 12 U.S.C. § 5512(b); cf. Morrison, 487 U.S. at 671. The Director wields civil and criminal enforcement authority as to nineteen different federal consumer-protection statutes. 12 U.S.C. § 5512(b)(1). He may examine and investigate individuals and entities to assess their compliance with those statutes. Id. §§ 5514(b), 5515(b), 5516. He may issue “civil investigative demand[s].” Id. § 5562(c). He may institute enforcement actions and conduct “adjudication proceedings.” Id. § 5563(a). He may sue in state or federal court to enforce consumer-protection laws. Id. § 5564(f). The CFPB may pursue actions to enforce the consumer protection laws in federal court, as well as in administrative actions before administrative law judges, and may issue subpoenas requesting documents or testimony in connection with those enforcement actions. See 12 U.S.C. §§ 5562-5564.

Likewise, the CFPB office is hardly “limited in jurisdiction.” Morrison, 487 U.S. at 672. The nineteen federal consumer-protection regimes the Director administers span across all reaches of American commerce. PHH Corp., 881 F.3d at 165-66 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). They “cover[] everything from home finance to student loans to credit cards to banking practices.” Id. The power the CFPB Director wields was previously exercised by seven different government agencies. See 12 U.S.C. § 5581(b).

These considerations all lead to the conclusion that the CFPB’s Acting Director carries the power of a principal officer. Cf. Morrison, 487 U.S. at 671 (“The line between ‘inferior’ and ‘principal’ officers is one that is far from clear, and the Framers provided little guidance into where it should be drawn.”). At a minimum, a close review of the powers the CFPB’s Acting Director will wield raises serious constitutional questions about whether Congress can take from the President the power to appoint the Acting Director.

C. English’s Proposed Statutory Interpretation Raises Grave Constitutional Concerns Courts Should Avoid.

1. In light of the significant powers the CFPB’s Director wields, English’s statutory interpretation arguments raise grave constitutional doubts that this Court should avoid. See Rust, 500 U.S. at 191.

It is well settled that when presented with plausible, competing interpretations of a statutory scheme—such as Appellees’ argument that the President’s choice of Acting Director is fully warranted under the Federal Vacancies Reform Act—courts generally should avoid resolving those disputes in a way that would raise constitutional concerns. Or, as this Court has put it, “[w]hen the validity of an act of the Congress is drawn in question, and even if a serious doubt of constitutionality is raised, it is a cardinal principle that this Court will first ascertain whether a construction of the statute is fairly possible by which the question may be avoided.” Janko, 741 F.3d at 145 n.9 (quoting Crowell, 285 U.S.at 62).

As set out above in Part I.B.2, the CFPB’s Acting Director wields extraordinary power over the daily lives of Americans. His power reflects that of a principal officer. Under the constitutional principles articulated in Morrison and Free Enterprise Fund, only the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, retains the power to bestow those powers on a single individual. See supra Part I.B.2. Yet English argues that the Dodd-Frank Act removes that power from the President.

If the Court wished to adopt English’s position, it would be forced to confront these important constitutional questions. Among other things, the Court would be forced to decide whether the CFPB’s Acting Director is an inferior officer or a principal officer. If the latter, then the Dodd-Frank Act may not assign the President’s appointment prerogative elsewhere. See Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 492-94. If the former, then the Court must confront whether the outgoing Director is a “Head of Department” capable of making such an appointment. See generally Kent Barnett, The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau’s Appointment with Trouble, 60 AM. U. L. REV. 1459, 1460 (2011) (arguing that “it is unclear if the Bureau is a ‘department’ and thus if the Director is a department head who can appoint the Deputy Director”); see also Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 510-11 (discussing meaning of “department”).

English, in other words, invites this Court to enter a constitutional quagmire. The Court should decline that invitation, especially since English has not identified any constitutional flaws in Appellees' arguments concerning the Federal Vacancies Reform Act—which is fully consistent with the President's appointment power and the separation of powers because it defers to the President's choice for this important role, consistent with the requirements of a congressionally enacted law.

2. The district court below properly acknowledged these principles. While its decision did not “hinge on” the canon of constitutional avoidance, the district court nevertheless observed that “English’s interpretation of Dodd–Frank potentially impairs the President’s ability to fulfill his obligations under the Take Care Clause.” English v. Trump, No. 17-2534, 2018 WL 358777, at *13 (D.D.C. Jan. 10, 2018). The district court noted that “under English’s reading, the CFPB’s Director has unchecked authority to decide who will inherit the potent regulatory and enforcement powers of that office, as well as the privilege of insulation from direct presidential control, in the event he resigns.” Id. Such an arrangement “lack[s] any precedent.” Id.

The district court found English’s position particularly troubling because of its impingement on the separation of powers. See id. at *14. As the court explained, “[t]he Constitution’s separation of powers is not a mere abstract principle, but a practical measure that is ‘critical to preserving liberty.’” Id. (quoting Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 501). Since the people cannot vote for Officers of the United States, they “must be able to hold the President accountable for his Take Care Clause responsibilities across the entire Executive Branch.” Id. That principle “is especially true regarding an office like the CFPB Director's, which is vested with unilateral, unchecked authority to bring enforcement actions—a core executive power with direct implications for individual liberty.” Id.

The district court thus correctly concluded that while it did not need to invoke the canon of constitutional avoidance in order to deny English's motion for injunctive relief, granting a preliminary injunction would have “pose[d] a serious constitutional problem.” Id.

3. Amicus District of Columbia, joined by other amici States, argues that because Congress' intent is clear, this case does not implicate the constitutional avoidance canon. Br. for D.C. 20.

Congress' intent is plain in the contrary direction: as Appellees' briefing demonstrates, and as the district court explained below, the Federal Vacancies Reform Act unambiguously bestows on the President the power to name Mulvaney Acting Director, and nothing in the Dodd-Frank Act supplants that power. The Court thus need not invoke the canon of constitutional avoidance to rule for Appellees.

The canon of constitutional avoidance simply confirms that English's position is untenable. At base, English believes that Congress has bestowed on an unelected bureaucrat the power to single-handedly override the President's decision as to who should “enjoy[] more unilateral authority than any other official in any of the three branches of the U.S. Government,” other than the President. PHH Corp., 881 F.3d at 166 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). As English interprets the relevant statute, Congress has removed from the head of the Executive Branch any say whatsoever in who will carry these extraordinary executive powers. As set out above, that outcome is fundamentally inconsistent with the structure of government our Constitution creates because it impermissibly divests the President of the power to “oversee” the faithful execution of the law. See Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 484.

Amicus District of Columbia further argues that the Appellees’ “position raises its own serious separation-of-powers questions.” Br. for D.C. 20. But Appellees’ insistence that the President is entitled to a say in the selection of an unprecedented, extraordinarily powerful executive branch bureaucrat is entirely consistent with the structure of Article II and Supreme Court authority from Myers to Free Enterprise Fund. See infra pp. 8-15. Amici fully expect that the President will quickly nominate the next permanent Director of the CFPB, and that the Senate will act expeditiously to fulfill its role of advising and consenting in the appointment of that individual. In the meantime, the President’s choice for Acting Director pursuant to the Federal Vacancies Reform Act must be honored.

II. The Federal Vacancies Reform Act Forecloses English’s Claims.

As explained above, the Court should reject English’s statutory interpretation arguments—and adopt those of Appellees—because English’s arguments would raise grave constitutional concerns. In all events, for the reasons the district court explained, amici agree that the Federal Vacancies Reform Act forecloses English’s request for injunctive relief.

CONCLUSION

The Court should affirm the judgment of the district court.

Respectfully submitted.

PATRICK MORRISEY
Attorney General of West Virginia

ERICA N. PETERSON
Assistant Attorney General

OFFICE OF THE WEST
VIRGINIA ATTORNEY
GENERAL

State Capitol Complex
Building 1, Room 26-E
Charleston, WV 25305
(304) 558-2021

STEVE MARSHALL
Attorney General of Alabama

MARK BRNOVICH
Attorney General of Arizona

LESLIE RUTLEGDE
Attorney General of Arkansas

PAMELA JO BONDI
Attorney General of Florida

CHRISTOPHER M. CARR
Attorney General of Georgia

DEREK SCHMIDT
Attorney General of Kansas

JEFF LANDRY
Attorney General of Louisiana

BILL SCHUETTE
Attorney General of Michigan

KEN PAXTON
Attorney General of Texas

JEFFERY C. MATEER
First Assistant Attorney General

BRANTLEY D. STARR
Deputy First Assistant Attorney
General

/s/ Scott A. Keller

SCOTT A. KELLER
Solicitor General
scott.keller@oag.texas.gov

Kyle D. Hawkins
Assistant Solicitor General

OFFICE OF THE TEXAS
ATTORNEY GENERAL
P.O. Box 12548, Mail Code 059
Austin, Texas 78711-2548
(512) 936-1700

Attorneys for Amici Curiae

DOUG PETERSON
Attorney General of Nebraska

MIKE HUNTER
Attorney General of Oklahoma

ALAN WILSON
Attorney General of South Carolina

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on March 2, 2018 the foregoing document was served via electronic filing on all counsel of record in this case.

/s/ Scott A. Keller

SCOTT A. KELLER

Solicitor General

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE

This brief contains 3,751 words, and therefore complies with the requirements of Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 29(a)(5). It further complies with the contents and form requirements of Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 29(a)(4).

/s/ Scott A. Keller

SCOTT A. KELLER

Solicitor General